SECOND EDITION.

At length Peregrine Pickle makes his appearance in a new edition, in fpite of all the art and induftry that were ufed to ftifle him in the birth, by certain bookfellers and others, who were at uncommon pains to mifreprefent the work and calumniate the author.

The performance was decried as an immoral piece, and a feurrilous libel; the author was charged with having defamed the characters of particular perfons, to whom he lay under confiderable obligations : And fome formidable critics declared, that the book was void of humour, character, and fentiment.

Thefe charges, had they been fupported by proof, would have certainly damned the writer and all his works; and even, unfupported as they were, had an unfavourable effect with the public : But, luckily for him, his real character was not unknown; and fome readers were determined to judge for themfelves, rather than trult implicitly to the allegations of his enemies. The book was found not altogether unworthy of their recommendation; a very large impression has been fold in England; another was bought up in a neighbouring kingdom; the work has been translated into the French language; and the domand for the original lately increased in England. It was the author's Juty, therefore, as well as his intereft, to oblige the public with this edition, which he has endeavoured to render lefs unworthy of their accepance, by retrenching the fuperfluities of the first, reforming its manners, and correcting its expression. Divers uninteresting incidents are wholly suppressed: Some humorous scenes he has endeavoured to heighten, and he flatters himself that he has expunged every adventure, phrase, and infinuation, that could be construed by the most delicate reader into a trespass upon the rules of decorum.

He owns, with contrition, that, in one or two inflances, he gave way too much to the fuggeftions of perfonal refentment, and reprefented characters as they appeared to him at that time, through the exaggerating medium of prejudice: But he has in this imprefion endeavoured to make atonement for thefe extravagancies. Howfoever he may have erred in point of judgment or diferetion, he defies the whole world to prove that he was ever guilty of one act of malice, ingratitude, or difhonour. This declaration he may be permitted to make, without incurring the imputation of vanity or prefumption, confidering the numerous fhafts of envy, rancour, and revenge, that have lately, both in private and in public, been levelled at his reputation.

Note. The two Letters relating to the Memoirs of a Lady of Quality, inferted at the beginning of the next volume, were fent to the editor by a perfon of honour.

CHAPTER I.

An account of Mr. Gamaliel Pickle. The difpolition of his fifter deferibed. He yields to her folicitations, and retires to the country.

IN a certain county of England, bounded on one fide by the fea, and at the diftance of one hundred miles from the metropolis, lived Gamaliel Pickle, Efq. the father of that hero whofe adventures we purpofe to record. He was the fon of a merchant in London, who (like Rome), from fmall beginnings, had raifed himfelf to the higheft honours of the city, and acquired a plentiful fortune, though, to his infinite regret, he died before it amounted to a plum, conjuring his fon, as he refpected the laft injunction of a parent, to imitate his induftry, and adhere to his maxims, until he fhould have made up the deficiency, which was a fum confiderably lefs than fifteen thouland pounds.

This pathetic remonstrance had the defired effect upon his reprefentative, who spared no pains to fulfil the request of the deceased, but exerted all the capacity with which nature had endowed him, in a feries of efforts, which, however, did not succeed; for, by the time he had been fifteen years in trade, he found himself five thousand pounds worfe than he was when he first took posses of his father's effects; a circumstance that af-Vol. II.

fected him to nearly, as to detach his inclinations from bufinefs, and induce him to retire from the world, to fome place where he might at leifure deplore his misfortunes, and, by frugality, fecure himfelf from want, and the apprehensions of a jail, with which his imagination was inceffantly haunted. He was often heard to express his fears of coming upon the parifh, and to blefs God, that, on account of his having been fo long a houfekeeper, he was entitled to that provision. In fhort, his talents were not naturally active, and there was a fort of inconfiftency in his character; for, with all the defire of amaffing which any citizen could poffibly entertain, he was encumbered by a certain indolence and fluggifhnefs that prevailed over every interested confideration, and even hindered him from profiting by the finglenefs of apprehension, and moderation of appetites, which have fo frequently conduced to the acquisition of immense fortunes, qualities which he poffetled in a very remarkable degree. Nature, in all probability, had mixed little or nothing inflammable in his composition; or, whatever feeds of excels the might have fown within him, were effectually flifled and deftroyed by the aufterity of his education.

The fallies of his youth, far from being inordinate or criminal, never exceeded the bounds of that decent jollity, which an extraordinary pot, on extraordinary occafions, may be fuppofed to have produced in a club of fedate book-keepers, whofe imaginations were neither very warm nor luxuriant. Little fubject to refined fenfations, he was fcarce ever difturbed with violent emotions of any kind. The paffion of love never interrupted his tranquillity; and if, as Mr. Creech fays after Horace,

> Not to admire is all the art I know, To make men happy, and to keep them fo.

Mr. Pickle was undoubtedly poffeffed of that invaluable fecret; at leaft he was never known to betray the fainteft fymptom of transport, except one evening at the club, where he observed, with some demonstrations of vivacity, that he had dincd upon a delicate loin of veal.

Notwithstanding this appearance of phlegm, he could not help feeling his difappointments in trade; and, upon the failure of a certain underwriter, by which he loft five hundred pounds, declared his defign of relinquifning bufinefs, and retiring to the country. In this refolution he was comforted and encouraged by his only fifter Mrs. Grizzle, who had managed his family fince the death of his father, and was now in the thirtieth year of her maidenhood, with a fortune of five thouland pounds, and a large ftock of economy and devotion.

Thefe qualifications, one would think, might have been the means of abridging the term of her celibacy, as fhe never expressed any averfion to wedlock; but it feems fhe was too delicate in her choice to find a mate to her inclination in the city; for I cannot suppose that the remained fo long unfolicited, though the charms of her perfon were not altogether enchanting, nor her manner over and above agreeable. Exclusive of a very wan (not to call it fallow) complexion, which perhaps was the effects of her virginity and mortification, the had a caft in her eyes that was not at all engaging, and fuch an extent of mouth, as no art or affectation could contract into any proportionable dimension : Then her piety was rather peevifh than refigned, and did not in the leaft diminish a certain statelines in her demeanour and conversation, that delighted in communicating the importance and honour of her family, which, by the by, was not to be traced two generations back, by all the power of heraldry or tradition.

She feemed to have renounced all the ideas fhe had acquired before her father ferved the office of fheriff; and the era which regulated the dates of all her obfervations, was the mayoralty of her papa. Nav, fo folicitous was this good lady for the fupport and propagation of the family name, that, suppressing every felfish motive, fhe actually prevailed upon her brother to combat with his own difpolition, and even furmount it fo far, as to declare a paffion for the perfon whom he afterwards wedded, as we fhall fee in the fequel. Indeed fhe was the fpur that inftigated him in all his extraordinary undertakings; and I queftion whether or not he would have been able to difengage himfelf from that courfe of life in which he had fo long mechanically moved, unlefs he had been roufed and actuated by her inceffant exhortations. London, fhe observed, was a receptacle of iniquity, where an honeft unfufpecting man was every day in danger of falling a facrifice to craft; where innocence was exposed to continual temptations, and virtue eternally perfecuted by malice and flander; where every thing was ruled by caprice and corruption, and merit utterly difcouraged and defpifed. This laft imputation the pronounced with fuch emphasis and chagrin, as plainly denoted how far fhe confidered herfelf as an example of what fhe advanced ; and really the charge was juitified by the conftructions that were put upon her retreat by her female friends, who, far from imputing it to the laudable motives that induced her, infinuated, in farcaftic commendations, that fhe had good reafon to be diffatisfied with a place where the had been to long overlooked; and that it was certainly her wifeft courfe to make her last effort in the country, where, in all probability, her talents would be lefs eclipfed, and her fortune more attractive.

Be this as it will, her admonitions, though they were powerful enough to convince, would have been infufficient to overcome the languor and vis inertia of her brother, had fhe not reinforced her arguments, by calling in queftion the credit of two or three merchants, with whom he was embarked in trade.

Alarmed at thefe hints of intelligence, he exerted himfelf effectually; he withdrew his money from trade, and laying it out in bank flock and India bonds, removed to a houle in the country, which his father had built near the fea-fide, for the convenience of carrying on a certain branch of traffic in which he had been deeply concerned.

Here then Mr. Pickle fixed his habitation for life, in the fix-and-thirtieth year of his age; and though the pangs he felt at parting with his intimate companions, and quitting all his former connections, were not quite foken as to produce any dangerous diforder in his conflitution, he did not fail to be extremely difconcerted at his first entrance into a feene of life to which he was totaily a ftranger. Not but that he met with abundance of people in the country, who, in confideration of his fortune, courted his acquaintance, and breathed nothing but friendship and hospitality: Yet even the trouble of receiving and returning these civilities, was an intolerable fatigue to a man of his habits and difpofition. He therefore left the care of the ceremonial to his fifter, who indulged herfelf in all the pride of formality, while he himfelf, having made a difcovery of a public houfe in the neighbourhood, went thither every evening, and enjoyed his pipe and cann; being very well fatisfied with the behaviour of the landlord, whofe communicative temper was a great comfort to his own taciturnity; for he fhunned all fuperfluity of fpeech, as much as he avoided any other unneceffary expence.

CHAPTER II.

He is made acquainted with the characters of Commodore Trunnion and his adherents; meets with them by accident, and contracts an intimacy with that commander.

THIS loquacious publican foon gave him fketches of all the characters in the county, and, among others, de-fcribed that of his next neighbour, Commodore Trunnion, which was altogether fingular and odd. " The commodore and your worfhip (faid he) will in a fhort time be hand and glove; he has a power of money, and fpends it like a prince-that is in his own way-for, to be fure, he is a little humourfome, as the faying is, and fwears woundily, though I'll be fworn he means no more harm than a fucking babe. Lord help us ! it will do your honour's heart good to hear him tell a ftory, as how he lay alongfide of the French, yard-arm and yard-arm, board and board, and of heaving grapplings, and flinkpots, and grapes, and round and double-headed partridges, crows and carters-Laud have mercy upon us! he has been a great warrior in his time, and loft an eye and a heel in the fervice-Then he does not live like any other Chriftian land-man; but keeps garrifon in his houfe, as if he were in the midft of his enemies, and makes his fervants turn out in the night, watch and watch (as he calls it) all the year round. His habitation is defended by a ditch, over which he has laid a draw-bridge, and planted his court-yard with patereroes continually loaded with fhot, under the direction of one Mr. Hatchway, who had one of his legs fliot away, while he acted as licutenant on board the commodore's thip; and now being on half pay, lives with him as his companion. The lieutenant is a very brave man, a great joker, and, as the faying is, hath got the length of his commander's foot; though he has another favourite in the houfe, called Tom Pipes, that was his boatfwain's mate, and now keeps the fervants in order. Tom is a man of few words, but an excellent hand at a fong concerning the boatfwain's whiftle, hufsle-cap, and chuck-farthing-there is not fuch another pipe in the county. So that the commodore lives very happy in his own manner; thof he be fometimes thrown into perilous paffions and quandaries, by the application of his poor kinfmen, whom he can't abide, because as how fome of them were the first occafion of his going to fea. Then he fweats with agony at the fight of an attorney; just for all the world, as fome people have an antipathy to a cat; for it feems he was once at law for firiking one of his officers, and caft in a fwinging fum. He is moreover exceedingly afflicted with goblins that diffurb his reft, and keep fuch a racket in his house, that you would think (God blefs us) ! all the devils in hell had broke loofe upon him. It was no longer ago than laft year about this time, that he was tormented the livelong night by two mifchievous fpirits that got into his chamber, and played a thoufand pranks about his hammock (for there is not one bed within his walls). Well, Sir, he rung his bell, called up all his fervants, got lights, and made a thorough fearch; but the devil a goblin was to be found. He had no fooner turned in again, and the reft of the family gone to fleep, than the foul fiends began their game anew. The commodore got up in the dark, drew his cutlafs, and attacked them both fo manfully, that, at five minutes, every thing in the apartment went to pieces. The lieutenant, hearing the noife, came to his affiftance. Tom Pipes, being told what was the matter, lighted his match, and, going down to the yard, fired all the patereroes as fignals of diffrets. Well, to be fure, the whole parifh was in a pucker: Some thought the French had landed; others imagined the commodore's house was befet by thieves; for my own part, I called up two dragoons that are quartered upon me; and they fwore with deadly oaths, it was a gang of fmugglers engaged with a party of their regiment that lies in the next village; and mounting their horfes like lufty fellows, rode up into the country as faft as their beafts could carry them. Ah, mafter ! thefe are hard times, when an industrious body cannot earn his bread without fear of the gallows. Your worfhip's father (God reft his foul)! was a good gentleman, and as well refpected in this parifh as e'er a he that walks upon neat's leather. And if your honour fhould want a small parcel of fine tea, or a few ankers of right Nants, I'll be bound you shall be furnished to your heart's content. But, as I was faying, the hubbub continued till morning, when the parlon being fent for, conjured the fpirits into the Red Sea; and the house has been pretty quiet ever fince. True it is, Mr. Hatchway makes a mock of the whole affair; and told his commander in this very bleffed fpot, that the two goblins were no other than a couple of jackdaws which had fallen down the chimney, and made a flapping with their wings up and down the apartment. But the commodore, who is very choleric, and does not like to be jeered, fell into a main high paffion, and ftormed like a perfect hurricane, fwearing that he knew a devil from a jackdaw as well as e'er a man in the three kingdoms. He owned, indeed, that the birds were found, but denied that they were the occasion of the uproar. For my own part, master, I believe much may be faid on both fides of the queftion, thof, to be fure, the devil is always going about, as the faying is."

This circumftantial account, extraordinary as it was, never altered one feature in the countenance of Mr. Pickle, who, having heard it to an end, took the pipe from his mouth, faying, with a look of infinite fagacity and deliberation, "I do fuppofe he is of the Cornifh Trunnions. What fort of a woman is his fpoufe?" "Spoufe! cried the other, odds heart! I don't think he would marry the Queen of Sheba. Lack-a-day! Sir, he won't fuffer his own maids to lie in the garrifon, but turns them into an out-houfe every night before the watch is fet. Blefs your honour's foul, he is, as it were, a very oddifh kind of a gentleman. Your worfhip would have feen him before A jijj now; for when he is well, he and my good mafter Hatehway come hither every evening, and drink a couple of earns of rumbo apiece; but he has been confined to his houfe this fortnight by a plaguy fit of the gout, which, I'll affure your worfhip, is a good penny out of my pocket."

At that inftant, Mr. Pickle's ears were faluted with fuch a ftrange noife, as even difeompofed the mufcles of his face, which gave immediate indications of alarm. This composition of notes at first refembled the erving of quails and croaking of bull-frogs; but, as it approached nearer, he could diftinguish articulate founds pronounced with great violence, in fuch a cadence as one would expect to hear from a human creature foolding through the organs of an afs. It was neither fpeaking nor braying, but a furprifing mixture of both, employed in the utterance of terms abfolutely unintelligible to our wondering merchant, who had just opened his mouth to express his euriofity, when the landlord, ftarting up at the well-known found, cried, "Odds niggers ! there is the commodore with his company, as fure as I live;" and with his apron began to wipe the duft off an elbow chair placed at one fide of the fire, and kept facred for the eafe and convenience of this infirm commander. While he was thus occupied, a voice still more uncouth than the former, bauled aloud, " Ho! the houfe, a hoy !" Upon which the publican, clapping a hand to each fide of his head, with his thumbs fixed to his ears, rebellowed in the fame tone, which he had learned to imitate, " Hilloah." The voice again exclaimed, "Have you got any attorneys aboard !" and when the landlord replied, "No, no;" this man of strange expectation came in, fupported by his two dependents, and difplayed a figure every way answerable to the oddity of his character. He was in stature at least fix feet high, though he had contracted an habit of flooping, by living fo long on board; his complexion was tawny, and his afpect rendered hidcous by a large fear across his nofe, and a patch that covered the place of one eye. Being feated in his chair with great formality, the landlord complimented him upon his being able to come abroad again; and having, in a whilper, communicated the name of his fellow gueft, whom the commodore already knew by report, went to prepare, with all imaginable defpatch, the first allowance of his favourite liquor, in three separate canns (for each was accommodated with his own portion apart), while the lieutenant fat down on the blind fide of his commander; and Tom Pipes, knowing his distance, with great modefly, took his station in the rear. After a paule of fome minutes, the conversation was begun by this ferocious chief, who, fixing his eye upon the lieutenant with a sternness of countenance not to be defcribed, addreffed him in thefe words : " Damn my eyes ! Hatchway, I always took you to be a better feaman than to overset our chaife in such fair weather. Blood ! did'nt I tell you we were running bump afhore, and bid you fet in the lee-brace, and haul upon a wind ?" " Yes, replied the other, with an arch fneer, I do confess as how you did give fuch orders, after you had run us foul of a poft, fo as that the carriage lay along, and could not right herfelf." " I run you foul of a post ! cried the commander; damn my heart ! you're a pretty dog, an't you, to tell me fo aboveboard to my face? Did I take charge of the chaife ? Did I ftand at the helm ?" " No, answered Hatchway; I must confess you did not steer; but howfomever, you cunned all the way, and fo, as you could not fee how the land lay, being blind of your larboard eye, we were fast ashore, before you knew any thing of the matter. Pipes, who flood abaft, can teftify the truth of what I fay." " Damn my limbs ! refumed the commodore, I don't value what you or Pipes fay a rope yarn. You're a couple of mutinous-I'll fay no more; but you shan't run your rig upon me, damn ye. I am the man that learnt you, Jack Hatchway, to fplice a rope, and raife a perpendicular."

The lieutenant, who was perfectly well acquainted with the trim of his captain, did not choofe to carry on the altercation any farther; but, taking up his cann, drank to the health of the flranger, who very courteoufly returned the compliment, without, however, prefuming to join in the conversation, which fuffered a confiderable pause. (During this interruption, Mr. Hatchway's wit difplayed itfelf in feveral practical jokes upon the commodore, with whom, he knew, it was dangerous to tamper in any other way. Being without the fphere of his vifion, he fecurely pilfered his tobacco, drank his rumbo, made wry faces, and (to ufe the vulgar phrafe) cocked his eye at him, to the no fmall entertainment of the fpectators, Mr. Pickle himfelf not excepted, who gave evident tokens of uncommon fatisfaction at the dexterity of this marine pantomime.

Meanwhile, the captain's choler gradually fubfided, and he was pleafed to defire Hatchway, by the familiar and friendly diminutive of Jack, to read a newspaper that lay on the table before him. This task was accordingly undertaken by the lame lieutenant, who, among other paragraphs, read that which follows, with an elevation of voice that feemed to prognofticate fomething extraordinary : " We are informed, that Admiral Bower will very foon be created a British Peer, for his eminent fervices during the war, particularly in his late engagement with the French fleet." Trunnion was thunderftruck at this piece of intelligence. The mug dropped from his hand, and fhivered into a thoufand pieces; his eye gliftened like that of a rattlefnake, and fome minutes elapfed before he could pronounce, " Avaft ! ovcrhaul that article again." It was no fooner read the fecond time, than fmiting the table with his fift, he ftarted up, and with the most violent emphasis of rage and indignation, exclaimed, " Damn my heart and liver ! 'is a land lie, d'ye fee; and I will maintain it to be a lie, from the fprit-fail yard to the mizen-top-fail haulvards ! Blood and thunder ! Will. Bower a peer of this realm! a fellow of yefterday, that fcarce knows a maft from a manger; a fnotty nofe boy, whom I myfelf have ordered to the gun, for stealing eggs out of the hencoops! and I, Haufer Trunnion, who commanded a fhip before he could keep a reckoning, am laid afide, d'ye fee, and forgotten ! If fo be, as this be the cafe, there is a rotten plank in our conftitution, which ought to be hove down and repaired, damn my eyes! For my own part, d'ye fee, I was none of your Guinea pigs; I did not rife in the fervice by parliamenteering interest, or a handfome bitch of a wife. I was not hoifted over the bellies of better men, nor ftrutted athwart the quarter-deck in a laced doublet, and thingumbobs at the wrifts. Damn my limbs ! I have been a hard-working man, and ferved all offices on board from cook's fhifter to the command of a veffel. Hear, you Tunley, there's the hand of a feaman, you dog." So faying, he laid hold on the landlord's fift, and honoured him with fuch a fqueeze. as compelled him to roar with great vociferation, to the infinite fatisfaction of the commodore, whole features were a little unbended, by this acknowledgment of his vigour; and he thus proceeded in a lefs outrageous strain: " They make a damned noife about this engagement with the French; but, egad ! it was no more than a bumboat battle, in comparison with some that I have feen. There was old Rook and Jennings, and another whom I'll be damned before I name, that knew what fighting was. As for my own fhare, d'ye fee, I am none of those that hollow in their own commendation; but if fo be that I were minded to ftand my own trumpeter, fome of those little fellows that hold their heads to high, would be taken all aback, as the faying is; they would be ashamed to show their colours, damn my eyes ! I once lay eight glaffes along-fide of the Flour de Loufe, a French man of war, though her metal was heavier, and her complement larger by an hundred hands than mine. You, Jack Hatchway, damn ye, what d'ye grin at? D'ye think I tell a ftory, becaufe you never heard it before ?"

"Why, look ye, Sir, anfwered the lieutenant, I am glad to find you can ftand your own trumpeter on occafion; thof I wifh you would change the tune; for that is the fame you have been piping every watch for thefe ten months paft. Tunley himfelf will tell you, he has heard it five hundred times." "God forgive you, Mr. Hatchway, faid the landlord, interrupting him; as I'm an honeft man and a houfekeeper, I never heard a fyllab of the matter."

This declaration, though not ftrictly true, was extremely agreeable to Mr. Trunnion, who, with an air of triumph, obferved, " Aha ! Jack, I thought I fhould bring you up, with your jibes and your jokes; but fuppofe you had heard it before, is that any reafon why it thould'nt be told to another perfon? There's the ftranger, belike he has heard it five hundred times too; han't you, brother ?" addreffing himfelf to Mr. Pickle; who, replied, with a look expreffing curiofity, " No, never," he thus went on : " Well, you feem to be an honeft quiet fort of a man; and therefore you must know, as I faid before, I fell in with a French man of war, Cape Finifterre bearing about fix leagues on the weather bow, and the chafe three leagues to leeward, going before the wind; whereupon I fer my fudding fails, and, coming up with her, hoifted my jack and enlign, and poured in a whole broadfide, before you could count three rattlins, in the mizen fbrouds; for I always keep a good lookout, and love to have the first fire." " That I'll be fworn, faid Hatchway; for the day we made the Triumph, you ordered the men to fire when the was hullto, by the fame token we below pointed the guns at a flight of gulls; and I won a cann of punch from the gunner, by killing the first bird." Exasperated at this farcafm, he replied with great vehemence, " You lie, lubber ! damn your bones ! what bufinefs have you to come always athwart my haufe in this manner? You, Pipes, was upon deck, and can bear witnefs, whether or not I fired too foon. Speak, you blood of a --, and that upon the word of a feaman; how did the chafe bear of us, when I gave orders to fire ?"

Pipes, who had hitherto fat filent, being thus called upon to give his evidence, after divers ftrange gefticulations, opened his mouth like a gafping cod, and with a cadence like that of the east wind finging through a cranny, pronounced, " Half a quarter of a league right upon our lee-beam." " Nearer, you porpuls-fae'd fwab ! (cried the commodore), nearer by twelve fathom; but howfomever, that's enough to prove the falfehood of Hatchway's jaw-and fo, brother, d'ye fee (turning to Mr. Pickle), I lay along-fide of the Flour de Loufe, yardarm and yard-arm, plying our great guns and fmall arms, and heaving in flink-pots, powder-bottles, and handgrenades, till our fhot was all expended, double-headed, partridge, and grape; then we loaded with iron crows, marlin fpikes, and old nails; but finding the Frenchman took a great deal of drubbing, and that he had fhot away all our rigging, and killed and wounded a great number of our men, d'ye fee, I refolved to run him on board upon his quarter, and fo ordered our grapplings to be got ready; but Monfieur, perceiving what we were about, filled his topfails and fheered off, leaving us like a log upon the water, and our fcuppers running with blood."

Mr. Pickle and the landlord paid fuch extraordinary attention to the rehearfal of this exploit, that Trunnion was encouraged to entertain them with more ftories of the fame nature; after which he observed, by way of encomium on the government, that all he had gained in the fervice was a lame foot and the lofs of an eye. The lieutenant, who could not find in his heart to lofe any opportunity of being witty at the expence of his commander, gave a loofe to his fatirical talent once more, faying, " I have heard as how you came by your lame foot, by having your upper decks overftowed with liquor. whereby you became crank, and roll'd, d'ye fee, in fuch a manner, that, by a pitch of the fhip, your ftarboard heel was jammed in one of the fcuppers; and as for the matter of your eye, that was knocked out by your own crew when the Lightning was paid off: There's poor Pipes, who was beaten into all the colours of the rainbow for taking your part, and giving you time to fheer off: and I don't find as how you have rewarded him according as he deferves." / As the commodore could not deny the truth of these anecdotes, however unfeatonably they were introduced, he affected to receive them with good humour, as jokes of the fleute-nant's own inventing; and replied, " Ay, ay, Jack, every body knows your tongue is no flander; but, howfomever, I'll work you to an oil for this, you dog." So faying, he lifted up one of his crutches, intending to lay it gently across Mr. Hatchway's pate; but Jack, with great agility, tilted up his wooden leg, with which he warded off the blow, to the no fmall admiration of Mr. Pickle, and utter aftonifhment of the landlord, who, by the by, had expressed the fame amazement, at the fame feat, at the fame hour, every night for three months before. Trunnion then directing his eye to the boatfwain's mate, " You, Pipes (faid he), do you go about and tell people that I did not reward you for standing by me, when I was hufsled by thefe rebellious rapfcallions; damn you, han't you been rated on the books ever fince ?" Tom, who indeed had no words to spare, fat fmoking his pipe with great indifference, and never dreamed of paying any regard to thefe interrogations; which being repeated and reinforced with many oaths, that (however) produced no effect, the commodore pulled out his purfe, faying, " Here, you bitch's baby, here's fomething better than a fmart ticket;" and threw it at his filent deliverer, who received and pocketed his bounty, without the leaft demonstration of furprise or fatisfaction ; while the donor turning to Mr. Pickle, " You fee, brother (faid he), I make good the old faying, we failors get money like horfes, and fpend it like affes; come, Pipes, let's have the boatfwain's whiftle, and be jovial." This mulician accordingly applied to his mouth the filver inftrument that hung at a button hole of his jacket, by a chain of the fame metal, and, though not quite fo ravithing as the pipe of Hermes, produced a found fo loud and fhrill, that the stranger (as it were instinctively) stopped his ears, to preferve his organs of hearing from such a dangerous invalion. The prelude being thus executed, Pipes fixed his eyes upon the egg of an oftrich that depended from the ceiling, and without once moving them from that object, performed the whole cantata in a tone of voice that feemed to be the joint iffue of an Irifh bagpipe and a fow-gelder's horn; the commodore, the lieutenant, and landlord joined in the chorus, repeating this elegant ftanza.

> Bufile, bufile, brave boys! Let us fing, let us toil, And drink all the while, Since labour's the price of our joys.

The third line was no fooner pronounced, than the cann was lifted to every man's mouth with admirable uniformity; and the next word taken up at the end of their draught with a twang equally expressive and harmonious. In short, the company began to understand one another; Mr. Pickle feemed to relish the entertainment, and a correspondence immediately commenced between him and Trunnion, who shook him by the hand, drank to further acquaintance, and even invited him to a mess of pork and pease in the garrison. The compliment was returned, good fellowship prevailed, and the night was pretty far advanced when the merchant's man arrived with a lanthorn to light his mafter home; upon which the new friends parted, after a mutual promife of meeting next evening in the fame place.

CHAPTER III.

Mrs. Grizzle exerts herfelf in finding a proper match for her brother; who is accordingly introduced to the young lady, whom he marries in due feafon,

I HAVE been the more circumftantial in opening the character of Trunnion, becaufe he bears a confiderable fhare in the courfe of thefe memoirs; but now it is high time to refume the confideration of Mrs. Grizzle, who, fince her arrival in the country, had been engroffed by a double care, namely that of finding a fuitable match for her brother, and a comfortable yoke-fellow for herfelf.

Neither was this aim the refult of any finister or frail fuggeftion, but the pure dictates of that laudable ambition, which prompted her to the prefervation of the family name. Nay, fo difiniterefted was fhe in this purfuit, that, postponing her nearest concern, or at least leaving her own fate to the filent operation of her charms, she laboured with such indefatigable zeal in behalf of her brother, that, before they had been three months fettled in the country, the general topic of conversation in the neighbourhood, was an intended match between the rich Mr. Pickle and the fair Mifs Appleby, daughter of a gentleman who lived in the next parish, and who, though he had but little fortune to bestow upon his children, had (to use his own phrafe) repleniss their veins with some of the best blood in the country.

This young lady, whofe character and difpolition Mrs. Grizzle had inveltigated to her own fatisfaction, was deftined for the fpoufe of Mr. Pickle, and an overture accordingly made to her father, who being overjoyed at the propofal, gave his confent without hefitation, and even recommended the immediate execution of the project with fuch eagernels, as feemed to indicate either a fulpicion of Mr. Pickle's conftancy, or a diffidence of his own daughter's complexion, which perhaps he thought too fanguine to keep much longer cool. The previous point being thus fettled, our merchant, at the infligation of Mrs. Grizzle, went to vifit his future father-in-law, and was introduced to the daughter, with whom he had, that fame afternoon, an opportunity of being alone. What paffed in that interview, I never could learn, though, from the character of the fuitor, the reader may justily conclude, that fhe was not much teafed with the impertinence of his addreffes. He was not, I believe, the lefs welcome for that reafon; certain it is, fhe made no objection to his taciturnity, and when her father communicated his refolution, acquiefced with the molt pious refignation. But Mrs. Grizzle, in order to give the lady a more favourable idea of his intellects than what his converfation could possibly infpire, was refolved to dictate a letter, which her brother fhould transcribe and transmit to his miftrefs, as the produce of his own underitanding, and had actually composed a very tender billet for this purpole; yet her intention was entirely fruitrated by the mifapprehenfion of the lover himfelf, who, in confequence of his fifter's repeated admonitions, anticipated her fcheme, by writing for himfelf, and defpatching the letter one afternoon, while Mrs. Grizzle was vifiting at the parfon's.

Neither was this ftep the effect of his vanity or precipitation; but having been often affured by his fifter, that it was abfolutely neceffary for him to make a declaration of his love in writing, he took this opportunity of acting in conformity with her advice, when his imagination was unengaged or undiffurbed by any other fuggeftion, without fufpecting the leaft that the intended to fave him the trouble of exercifing his own genius. Left, therefore, as he imagined, to his own inventions, he fat down and produced the following morceau, which was transmitted to Mifs Appleby, before his fifter and counfellor had the leaft intimation of the affair.

Mifs SALLY APPLEBY.

" MADAM,

" UNDERSTANDING you have a parcel of heart, warranted found, to be difpofed of, fhall be willing to treat for faid commodity, on reafonable terms; doubt not fhall agree for fame; fhall wait of you for further information, when and where you fhall appoint. This the needful from

Yours, &c.

GAM. PICKLE."

This laconic epiftle, fimple and unadorned as it was, met with as cordial a reception from the perfon to whom it was addreffed, as if it had been couched in the moft elegant terms that delicacy of paffion and cultivated genius could fupply; nay, I believe, was the more welcome, on account of its mercantile plainnefs: Becaufe, when an advantageous match is in view, a fenfible woman often confiders the flowery profeffions and rapturous exclamations of love as enfnaring ambiguities, or at beft impertinent preliminaries, that retard the treaty they are defigned to promote; whereas Mr. Pickle removed all difagreeable uncertainty, by defecting at once to the moft interefting particular.

She had no fooner, as a dutiful child, communicated this billet doux to her father, than he, as a careful parent, vifited Mr. Pickle, and, in prefence of Mrs. Grizzle, demanded a formal explanation of his fentiments with regard to his daughter Sally. Mr. Gamaliel, without any ceremony, affured him he had a respect for the young woman, and, with his good leave, would take her for better for worfe. Mr. Appleby, after having expressed his fatisfaction that he had fixed his affections in his family, comforted the lover with the affurance of his being agreeable to the young lady, and they forthwith proceeded to the articles of the marriage-fettlement, which being discuffed and determined, a lawyer was ordered to engrofs them; the wedding-clothes were bought, and, in fhort, a day was appointed for the celebration of their nuptials, to which every body of any fashion in the neighbourhood was invited. Among these Commodore 'Trunnion and Mr. Hatchway were not forgotten, being the fole companions of the bridegroom, with whom, by this time, they had contracted a fort of intimacy at their nocturnal rendezvous.

Vol. II.

В

They had received a previous intimation of what was on the anvil from the landlord, before Mr. Pickle thought proper to declare himfelf; in confequence of which, the topic of the one-eyed commander's difcourfe at their meeting, for feveral evenings before had been the folly and plague of matrimony, on which he held forth with great vehemence of abufe, levelled at the fair fex, whom he reprefented as devils incarnate, fent from hell to torment mankind; and, in particular, inveighed against old maids, for whom he feemed to entertain a fingular averfion; while his friend Jack confirmed the truth of all his allegations, and gratified his own malignant vein at the fame time, by clenching every fentence with a fly joke upon the married ftate, built upon fome allufion to a fhip or fea-faring life. He compared a woman to a great gun loaded with fire, brimftone, and noife, which, being violently heated, will bounce and fly, and play the devil, if you don't take fpecial care of her breechings. He faid the was like a hurricane, that never blows from one quarter, but veers about to all points of the compais: He likened her to a painted galley curioufly rigged, with a leak in her hold, which her hufband would never be able to ftop. He observed that her inclinations were like the Bay of Bilcay; for why? becaule you may heave your deep fea lead long enough without ever reaching the bottom. That he who comes to anchor on a wife, may find himfelf moored in damned foul ground, and, after all, can't for his bloed flip his cable; and that, for his own part, thof he might make thort trips for pattime, he would never embark in woman on the voyage of life, because he was afraid of foundering in the first foul weather.

In all probability, thefe infinuations made fome imprefition on the mind of Mr. Pickle, who was not very much inclined to run great rifks of any kind; but the injunctions and importunities of his fifter, who was bent upon the match, over balanced the opinion of his fea friends, who, finding him determined to marry, notwithftanding all the hints of caution they had thrown out, refolved to accept his invitation, and honoured his nuptials with their prefence accordingly.

CHAPTER IV.

The behaviour of Mrs. Grizzle at the wedding, with an account of the guefts.

I HOPE it will not be thought uncharitable, if I advance, by way of conjecture, that Mrs. Grizzle, on this grand occafion, fummoned her whole exertion, to play off the artillery of her charms upon the fingle gentlemen who were invited to the entertainment : Sure I am, the difplayed to the beft advantage all the engaging qualities The poffeffed : Her affability at dinner was altogether uncommon; her attention to the guefts was fuperfluoufly hofpitable; her tongue was fheathed with a most agreeable and infantine lifp; her addrefs was perfectly obliging; and though, confcious of the extraordinary capacity of her mouth, the would not venture to hazard a laugh; the modelled her lips into an enchanting fimper, which played upon her countenance all day long; nay, the even profited by that defect in her vision we have already obferved, and fecurely contemplated those features which were most to her liking, while the rest of the company believed her regards were difpofed in a quite contrary direction. With what humility of complaifance did the receive the compliments of those who could not help praifing the elegance of the banquet ! and how pioufly did fhe feize that opportunity of commemorating the henours of her fire, by obferving that it was no merit in her to understand fomething of entertainments, as she had occasion to prefide at fo many, during the mayoralty of her papa! Far from difcovering the leaft fymptom of pride and exultation, when the opulence of her family became the fubject of conversation, the affumed a feverity of countenance; and, after having moralized on the vanity of riches, declared, that those who looked upon her as a fortune were very much miltaken; for her father had left her no more than poor five thouland pound., which, with what little fhe had faved of the intercft fince his death, was all fhe had to depend upon : Indeed, if file had placed her chief felicity in wealth, the thould not have been fo forward in deftroying her own expectations, by advifing and promoting the event at which they were now fo happily affembled; but the hoped the thould always have virtue enough to polypone any interefted confideration, when it thould happen to claft with the happinefs of her friends. Finally, fuch was her modelty and felf-denial, that the industriously informed those whom it might concern, that the was no lefs than three years older than the bride; though, had the added ten to the reckoning, the would have committed no miftake in point of computation.

To contribute as much as lay in her power to the fatisfaction of all prefent, flie, in the afternoon, regaled them with a tune on the harpfichord, accompanied with her voice, which, though not the moft melodious in the world, I dare fay, would have been equally at their fervice, could fhe have vied with Philomel in fong; and as the laft effort of her complaifance, when dancing was propofed, fhe was prevailed upon, at the requeft of her new fifter, to open the ball in perfon.

In a word, Mrs. Grizzle was the principal figure in this feftival, and almost eclipsed the bride, who, far from feeming to difpute the pre-eminence, very wifely allowed her to make the best of her talents; contenting herfelf with the lot to which fortune had already called her, and which she imagined would not be the lefs defirable, if her fifter-in-law were detached from the family.

I believe I need fcarce advertife the reader, that, during this whole entertainment, the commodore and his lieutenant were quite out of their element; and this, indeed, was the cafe with the bridegroom himfelf, who, being utterly unacquainted with any fort of polite commerce, found himfelf under a very difagreeable reftraint during the whole fcene.

Trunnion, who had fcarce ever been on fhore till he was paid off, and never once in his whole life in the company of any females above the rank of thofe who herd upon the Point at Portfinouth, was more embarraffed about his behaviour, than if he had been furrounded at fea by the whole French navy. He had never pronounced the word Madam fince he was born; fo that, far from entering into conversation with the ladies, he would not even return the compliment, or give the leaft nod of civility when they drank to his health; and I verily believe, would rather have fuffered fuffocation, than allowed the fimple phrafe, your fervant, to proceed from his mouth. He was altogether as inflexible with refpect to the attitudes of his body; for, either through obstinacy or bashfulness, he fat upright without motion, infomuch that he provoked the mirth of a certain wag, who, addreffing himfelf to the lieutenant, afked whether that was the commodore himfelf, or the wooden lion that ufed to ftand at his gate? An image to which, it must be owned, Mr. Trunnion's perfon bore no faint refemblance.

Mr. Hatchway, who was not quite fo unpolifhed as the commodore, and had certain notions that feemed to approach the ideas of common life, made a lefs uncouth appearance; but then he was a wit, and though of a very peculiar genius, partook largely of that difpolition which is common to all wits, who never enjoy themfelves, except when their talents meet with those marks of diftinction and veneration, which (in their own opinion) they deferve.

These circumstances being premised, it is not to be wondered at if this triumvirate made no objections to the propofal, when fome of the grave perfonages of the company made a motion for adjourning into another apartment, where they might enjoy their pipes and bottles, while the young folks indulged themfelves in the continuance of their own favourite diversion. Thus refcued, as it were, from a ftate of annihilation, the first use the two lads of the caftle made of their existence, was to ply the bridegroom fo hard with bumpers, that, in lefs than an hour, he made divers efforts to fing, and foon after was carried to bed, deprived of all manner of fenfation, to the utter difappointment of the bridemen and maids, who, by this accident, were prevented from throwing the flocking, and performing certain other ceremonies practifed on fuch occasions. As for the bride, she bore this misfortune with great good humour; and indeed, on all occasions, behaved like a difcreet woman, B iii

CHAPTER V.

Mrs. Pickla affumes the reins of government in her own family; her fifter-in-law undertakes an enterprife of great moment; but is for fome time diverted from her purpole by a very interefting confideration.

WHATEVER deference, not to fay fubmiffion, the had paid to Mrs. Grizzle before the was fo nearly allied to her family, the no fooner became Mrs. Pickle, than the thought it incumbent upon her to act up to the dignity of the character; and the very day after the marriage, ventured to diffute with her fifter-in-law on the fubject of her own pedigree, which the affirmed to be more honourable in all refpects than that of her hufband; obferving that feveral younger brothers-of her houfe had arrived at the flation of Lord Mayor of London, which was the higheft pitch of greatnets that any of Mr. Pickle's predecettors had ever attained.

This prefumption was like a thunderbolt to Mrs. Grizzle, who began to perceive that fhe had not fucceeded quite fo well as fhe imagined, in felecting for her brother a gentle and obedient voke-fellow, who would always treat her with that profound respect which she thought due to her fuperior genius, and be entirely regulated by her advice and direction : However, the still continued to manage the reins of government in the house, reprehending the fervants as usual; an office the performed with great capacity, and in which the feemed to take fingular delight, until Mrs. Pickle, on pretence of confulting her cafe, told her one day fhe would take that trouble upon herfelf, and for the future affume the management of her own family. Nothing could be more mortifying to Mrs. Grizzle than fuch a declaration, to which, after a confiderable paule, and ftrange diffortion of look, the replied, " I thall never refule or repine at any trouble that may conduce to my brother's advantage." " Dear Madam," anfwered the fifter, " I am infinitely obliged to your kind concern for Mr. Pickle's intereft, which I confider as my own, but I cannot bear to fee you a fufferer by your friendfhip; and, therefore, infift upon exempting you from the fatigue you have borne fo long."

In vain did the other proteft that fhe took pleafure in the tafk; Mrs. Pickle afcribed the affurance to her excefs of complaifance, and expressed fuch tenderness of zeal for her dear fifter's health and tranquillity, that the reluctant maiden found herfelf obliged to refign her authority, without enjoying the least pretext for complaining of her being deposed.

This difgrace was attended by a fit of peevifh devotion that lasted three or four weeks; during which period, fhe had the additional chagrin of feeing the young lady gain an afcendency over the mind of her brother, who was perfuaded to fet up a gay equipage, and improve his housekeeping, by an augmentation in his expence, to the amount of a thoufand a-year at leaft; though his alteration in the economy of his household effected no change in his own disposition, or manner of life; for as foon as the painful ceremony of receiving and returning vifits was performed, he had recourfe again to the company of his fea friends, with whom he fpent the beft part of his time. But if he was fatisfied with his condition, the cafe was otherwife with Mrs. Grizzle, who, finding her importance in the family greatly diminished, her attractions neglected by all the male fex in the neighbourhood, and the withering hand of time hang threatening over her head, began to feel the horror of eternal virginity, and, in a fort of defperation, refolved at any rate to refcue herfelf from that uncomfortable fituation. Thus determined, fhe formed a plan, the execution of , which, to a fpirit lefs enterprifing and fufficient than hers, would have appeared altogether impracticable; this was no other than to make a conquest of the commodore's hearr, which the reader will eafily believe was not very fufceptible of tender impressions; but, on the contrary, fortified with infenfibility and prejudice against the charms of the whole fex, and particularly prepotleffed to the prejudice of that clafs diffinguithed by the appellation of old maids, in which Mrs. Grizzle was by this time unhappily rank-E iiij

ed. She neverthelefs took the field, and, having invefted this feemingly impregnable fortrefs, began to break ground one day, when Trunnion dincd at her brother's, by fpringing certain enfnaring commendations on the honefty and fincerity of fea-faring people, paying a particular attention to his plate, and affecting a fimper of approbation at every thing he faid, which by any means the could conftrue into a joke, or with modefty be fuppofed to hear; nay, even when he left decency on the left hand (which was often the cafe), fhe ventured to reprimand his freedom of fpeech with a gracious grin, faying, "Sure you gentlemen belonging to the fea have fuch an odd way with you." But all this complacency was fo ineffectual, that, far from fuspecting the true cause of it, the commodore, that very evening, at the club, in prefence of her brother, with whom by this time he could take any manner of freedom, did not fcruple to damn her for a fquinting, block-faced, chattering pifs-kitchen; and immediately after drank defpair to all old maids. The toaft Mr. Pickle pledged without the leaft hefitation, and next day intimated to his fifter, who bore the indignity with furprising refignation, and did not therefore defift from her scheme, unpromising as it seemed to be, until her attention was called off, and engaged in another care, which, for fome time, interrupted the progress of this defign. Her fifter had not been married many months, when the exhibited evident fymptoms of pregnancy, to the general fatisfaction of all concerned, and the inexpressible joy of Mrs. Grizzle, who (as we have already hinted) was more interested in the prefervation of the family name, than in any other confideration whatever. She therefore no fooner difcovered appearances to juftify and confirm her hopes, than postponing her own purpofe, and laying afide that pique and refentment fhe had conceived from the behaviour of Mrs. Pickle, when fhe fuperieded her authority, or perhaps confidering her in no other light than that of the vehicle which contained and was deftined to convey her brother's heir to light, fhe determined to exert her uttermost in nursing, tending, and cherishing her, during the term of her important charge. With this view the purchafed Culpepper's Midwiferv, which, with that fagacious performance dignified with Aristotle's name, she studied with indefatigable care, and diligently perufed the Complete Houfewife, together with Quincy's Difpenfatory, culling every jelly, marmalade, and conferve which these authors recommend as either falutary or toothfome, for the benefit and comfort of her fifter-in-law, during her gestation. She reftricted her from eating roots, pot-herbs, fruit, and all forts of vegetables; and one day, when Mrs. Pickle had plucked a peach with her own hand, and was in the very act of putting it between her teeth, Mrs. Grizzle perceived the rath attempt, and running up to her, fell upon her knees in the garden, entreating her, with tears in her eyes, to refift fuch a pernicious appetite. Her requeft was no fooner complied with, than, recollecting that, if her fifter's longing was baulked, the child might be affected with fome difagreeable mark, or deplorable difeafe, the begged as earneftly that the would fwallow the fruit, and, in the mean time, ran for fome cordial water of her own composing, which the forced upon her fifter, as an antidote to the poifon the had received.

This exceflive zeal and tendernefs did not fail to be very troublefome to Mrs. Pickle, who having revolved divers plans for the recovery of her own eafe, at length determined to engage Mrs. Grizzle in fuch employment as would interrupt that clofe attendance which the found fo teafing and difagreeable. Neither did the wait long for an opportunity of putting her refolution in practice. The very next day, a gentleman happening to dine with Mr. Pickle, unfortunately mentioned a pine-apple, part of which he had eaten a week before at the houfe of a nobleman who lived in another part of the country, at the diftance of an hundred miles at leaft.

The name of this fatal fruit was no fooner pronounced than Mrs. Grizzle, who inceffantly watched her fifter's looks, took the alarm, becaufe fhe thought they gave certain indications of curiofity and defire; and, after having obferved that fhe herfelf could never eat pine-apples, which were altogether unnatural productions, extorted by the force of artificial fire out of filthy manure, afked with a faultering voice, if Mrs. Pickle was not of her way of thinking? This young lady, who wanted neither flynefs nor penetration, at once divined her meaning, and replied with feeming unconcern, that for her own part, the thould never repine, if there was not a pineapple in the univerfe, provided the could indulge herfelf with the fruits of her own country.

This answer was calculated for the benefit of the ftranger, who would certainly have fuffered for his imprudence by the refentment of Mrs. Grizzle, had her fifter expressed the least relish for the fruit in question. It had the defired effect, and re-eftablished the peace of the company, which was not a little endangered by the gentleman's want of confideration. Next morning, however, after breakfast, the pregnant lady, in purfuance of her plan, yawned (as it were by accident) full in the face of her maiden fifter, who being infinitely difturbed by this convultion, affirmed it was a fymptom of longing, and infifted upon knowing the object in defire, when Mrs. Pickle, affuming an affected fmile, told her fhe had caten a most delicious pine-apple in her This declaration was attended with an immedifleen. ate foream, uttered by Mrs. Grizzle, who inflantly perceiving her fifter furprifed at the exclamation, clafped her in her arms, and affured her," with a fort of a hyfterical laugh, that fhe could not help fcreaming with joy, becaufe fhe had it in her power to gratify her dear fifter's wifh; a lady in the neighbourhood having promifed to fend her, in a prefent, a couple of delicate pine-apples, which fhe would that very day go in queft of.

Mrs. Pickle would by no means confent to this propofal, on pretence of fparing the other unneceffary fatigue; and affured her, that if the had any defire to eat a pine-apple, it was fo faint, that the difappointment could produce no bad confequence. But this affurance was conveyed in a manner (which the knew very well how to adopt) that, inftead of diffuading, rather thimulated Mrs. Grizzle to fet out immediately, not on a vifit to that lady, whofe promife the herfelf had feigned, with a view of confulting her fifter's tranquillity, but on a random fearch through the whole country for this unlucky fruit, which was like to produce fo much vexation and prejudice to her and her father's houfe. During three whole days and nights, did fhe, attended by a valet, ride from place to place without fuccefs, unmindful of her health, and carelefs of her reputation, that began to fuffer from the nature of her inquiry, which was purfued with fuch peculiar eagernefs and diffraction, that every body with whom fhe converfed looked upon her as an unhappy perfon, whofe intellects were not a little difordered.

Baffled in all her refearches within the county, fhe at length refolved to vifit that very nobleman, at whofe hould the officious firanger had been (for her) to unfortunately regaled, and actually arrived in a poft-chaife at the place of his habitation, where fhe introduced her bufinets as an affair on which the happinets of a whole family depended. By virtue of a prefent to his Lordfhip's gardener the procured the Hefperian fruit, with which the returned in triumph.

CHAPTER VI.

Mrs. Grizzle is indefatigable in gratifying her fifter's longings. Peregrine is born, and managed contrary to the directions and remonftrances of his aunt, who is difguided upon that account, and relates the plan which the had before rejected.

The fuccefs of this device would have encouraged Mrs. Pickle to practife more of the fame fort upon her fifterin-law, had fhe not been deterred by a violent fever which feized her zealous ally, in confequence of the fatigue and uneafinefs fhe had undergone; which, while it lafted, as effectually conduced to her repofe, as any other ftratagem fhe could invent. But Mrs. Grizzle's health was no fooner reftored, than the other, being as much incommoded as ever, was obliged, in her own defence, to have recourfe to fome other contrivance; and managed her artifices in fuch a manner, as leaves it at this day a doubt whether fhe was really fo whimfical and capricious in her appetites as fhe herfelf pretended to be; for her longings were not reftricted to the demands of the palate and ftomach, but alfo affected all the other organs of fenfe, and even invaded her imagination, which at this period feemed to be firangely difeafed.

One time fhe longed to pinch her hufband's ear; and it was with infinite difficulty that his fifter could prevail upon him to undergo the operation. Yet this tafk was eafy, in comparison with another the undertook for the gratification of Mrs. Pickle's unaccountable defire ; which was no other than to perfuade the commodore to fubmit his chin to the mercy of the big-bellied lady, who ardently wifhed for an opportunity of plucking three black hairs from his beard. When this propofal was first communicated to Mr. Trunnion by the hufband, his anfwer was nothing but a dreadful effusion of oaths, accompanied with fuch a ftare, and delivered in fuch a tone of voice, as terrified the poor befeecher into immediate filence; fo that Mrs. Grizzle was fain to take the whole enterprife upon herfelf, and next day went to the garrifon accordingly, where, having obtained entrance by means of the lieutenant, who, while his commander was alleep, ordered her to be admitted for the joke's fake, fhe waited patiently till he turned out, and then accosted him in the yard, where he used to perform his morning walk. He was thunderftruck at the appearance of a woman in a place which he had hitherto kept facred from the whole fex, and immediately began to utter an apostrophe to Tom Pipes, whofe turn it was then to watch; when Mrs. Grizzle, falling on her knees before him, conjured him with many pathetic fupplications, to hear and grant her requeft, which was no fooner fignified, than he bellowed in fuch an outrageous manner, that the whole court re-echoed the opprobrious term bitch, and the word damnation, which he repeated with furprising volubility, without any fort of propriety or connection; and retreated into his penetralia, leaving the baffled devotee in the humble pofture fhe had fo unfuccefsfully chofen to melt his obdurate heart.

Mortifying as this repulfe must have been to a lady of her stately disposition, she did not relinquish her aim, but endeavoured to interest the commodore's counsellors and adherents in her cause. With this view she folicited the interest of Mr. Hatchway, who, being highly pleased with a circumstance fo productive of mirth and diversion, readily entered into her meafures, and promifed to employ his whole influence for her fatisfaction; and, as for the boatfwain's mate, he was rendered propitious by the prefent of a guinea, which the flipped into his hand. In fhort, Mrs. Grizzle was continually engaged in this negotiation for the fpace of ten days, during which the commodore was fo inceffantly peftered with her remonftrances, and the admonitions of his affociates, that he fwore his people had a defign upon his life, which becoming a burden to him, he at last complied, and was conducted to the fcene like a victim to the altar, or rather like a reluctant bear, when he is led to the stake amidst the shouts and cries of butchers and their dogs. After all, this victory was not quite fo decifive as the conquerors imagined; for the patient being fet, and the performer prepared with a pair of pincers, a fmall difficulty occurred : She could not for fome time difcern one black hair on the whole fuperficies of Mr. Trunnion's face; when Mrs. Grizzle, very much alarmed and difconcerted, had recourfe to a magnifying glafs that flood upon her toilet; and, after a most accurate examination, difcovered a fibre of a dufky hue, to which the inftrument being applied, Mrs. Pickle pulled it up by the roots, to the no fmall difcomposure of the owner, who feeling the fmart much more fevere than he had expected, ftarted up, and fwore he would not part with another hair to fave them all from damnation.

Mr. Hatchway exhorted him to patience and refignation; Mrs. Grizzle repeated her entreaties with great humility; but finding him deaf to all her prayers, and abfolutely bent upon leaving the house, she clasped his knees, and begged for the love of God that he would have compassion upon a distressed family, and endure a little more for the fake of the poor infant, who would otherwife be born with a gray beard upon its chin. Far from being melted, he was rather exafperated by this reflection; to which he replied with great indignation, " Damn you for a yaw-fighted bitch ! he'll be hanged long enough before he has any beard at all :" So faying, he difengaged himfelf from her embraces, flung out at the door, and halted homewards with fuch furprifing fpeed, that the lieutenant could not overtake him until he had arrived at his own gate; and Mrs. Grizzle was fo much affected with his cfcape, that her fifter, in pure compaffion, defired the would not afflict herfelf, protefting that her own with was already gratified, for the had plucked three hairs at once, having from the beginning been dubious of the commodore's patience. But the labours of this affiduous kinfwoman did not end with the achievment of this adventure; her eloquence or industry was employed without ceating, in the performance of other talks imposed by the ingenious craft of her lifterin-law, who, at another time, conceived an infuppreflible affection for a fricaffee of frogs, which should be the genuine natives of France; fo that there was a necessity for defpatching a meffenger on purpole to that kingdom : But, as the could not depend upon the integrity of any common fervant, Mrs. Grizzle undertook that province, and actually fet fail in a cutter from Boulogne, from whence fhe returned in eight-and-forty hours with a tub full of those live animals, which, being dreffed according to art, her fifter would not tafte them, on pretence that her fit of longing was paft; but then her inclinations took a different turn, and fixed themfelves upon a curious implement belonging to a lady of quality in the neighbourhood, which was reported to be a very great curiofity; this was no other than a porcelain chamber-pot of admirable workmanship, contrived by the honourable owner, who kept it for her own private ufe, and cherifhed it as an utenfil of ineftimable value.

Mrs. Grizzle fluddered at the firft hint fhe received of her fifter's defire to poffefs this piece of furniture, becaufe fhe knew it was not to be purchafed; and the lady's character, which was none of the moft amiable in point of humanity and condefcenfion, forbade all hopes of borrowing it for a feafon; fhe therefore attempted to reafon down this capricious appetite, as an extravagance of imagination which ought to be combated and repreffed; and Mrs. Pickle, to all appearance, was convinced and fatisfied by her arguments and advice; but, neverthelefs, could make ufe of no other convenience, and was threatened with a very dangerous fuppretfien. Roufed at the peril in which fhe fuppofed her to be, Mrs. Grizzle flew to the lady's houfe, and, having obtained a private audience, difclofed the melancholy fituation of her fifter, and implored the benevolence of her ladyfhip; who, contrary to expectation, received her very gracioufly, and confented to indulge Mrs. Pickle's longing. Mr. Pickle began to be out of humour at the expence to which he was exposed by the caprice of his wife, who was herfelf alarmed at this laft accident, and, for the future, kept her fancy within bounds; infomuch, that, without being fubject to any more extraordinary trouble, Mrs. Grizzle reaped the long-wifhed-for fruits of her dearest expectation in the birth of a fine boy, whom her fifter in a few months brought into the world.

I shall omit the description of the rejoieings, which were infinite, on this important occasion, and only obferve, that Mrs. Pickle's mother and aunt ftood godmothers, and the commodore affifted at the ceremony as godfather to the child, who was chriftened by the name of Peregrine, in compliment to the memory of a deceafed uncle. While the mother was confined to her bed, and incapable of maintaining her own authority, Mrs. Grizzle took charge of the infant by a double claim; and fuperintended with furprifing vigilance the nurfe and midwife in all the particulars of their respective offices, which were performed by her express direction. But no fooner was Mrs. Pickle in a condition to re-affume the management of her own affairs, than the thought proper to alter certain regulations concerning the child, which had obtained in confequence of her filter's orders, directing, among other innovations, that the bandages with which the infant had been fo neatly rolled up, like an Egyptian nummy, fhould be loofened and laid afide, in order to rid nature of all reftraint, and give the blood free fcope to circulate; and with her own hands fhe plunged him headlong every morning in a tub full of cold water. This operation feemed to barbarous to the tender-hearted Mrs. Grizzle, that the not only opposed it with all her eloquence, fliedding abundance of tears over the facrifice when it was made, but took horfe immediately, and departed for the habitation of an eminent country phyfician, whom the confulted in thefe words: " Pray, Doctor, is it not both dangerous and cruel to be the means of letting a poor tender infant perifh, by fouling it in water as cold as ice?" "Yes," replied the doctor, "downright murder, I affirm." "I fee you are a perfon of great learning and fagacity," faid the other; "and I muft beg you will be fo good as to fignify your opinion in your own handwriting." The doctor immediately complied with her requeft, and expressed himfelf upon a flip of paper to this purpofe—

Thefe are to certify whom it may concern, that I firmly believe, and it is my unalterable opinion, that whofeever letteth an infant perifh, by foufing it in cold water, even though the faid water fhould not be fo cold as ice, is in effect guilty of the murder of the faid infant—as witnefs my hand. Comfit Colycynth.

Having obtained this certificate, for which the phyfician was immediately acknowledged, fhe returned exulting, and hoping, with fuch authority, to overthrow all oppofition. Accordingly, next morning, when her nephew was about to undergo his diurnal baptifm, fhe produced the commiffion, whereby fhe conceived herfelf empowered to over-rule fuch inhuman proceedings. But fhe was difappointed in her expectation, confident as it was; not that Mrs. Pickle pretended to differ in opinion from Dr. Colycynth, " for whofe character and fentiments (faid fhe) I have fuch veneration, that I fhall carefully obferve the caution implied in this very certificate, by which, far from condemning my method of practice, he only afferts that killing is murder; an affeveration, the truth of which, it is to be hoped, I fhall never difpute."

Mrs. Grizzle, who, footh to fay, had rather too fuperficially confidered the claufe by which fhe thought herfelf authorifed, perufed the paper with more accuracy, and was confounded at her own want of penetration. Yet, though fhe was confuted, fhe was by no means convinced that her objections to the cold bath were unreafonable; on the contrary, after having beftowed fundry opprobrious epithets on the phyfician, for his want of knowledge and candour, fhe protefted in the most earnest and folemn manner against the pernicious practice of dipping the child; a piece of cruelty which, with God's affishance, fhe fhould never fuffer to be inflicted on her bwn iffue; and washing her hands of the melancholy confequence that would certainly enfue, thut herfelf up in her clofet, to indulge her forrow and vexation. She was deceived, however, in her prognoftic : The boy, inftead of declining in point of health, feemed to acquire fresh vigour from every plunge, as if he had been re-solved to difcredit the wifdom and foresight of his aunt, who, in all probability, could never forgive him for this want of reverence and respect. This conjecture is founded upon her behaviour to him in the fequel of his infancy, during which the was known to torture him more than once, when the had opportunities of thrufting pins into his flefh, without any danger of being detected. In a word, her affections were in a little time altogether alienated from this hope of her family, whom the abandoned to the conduct of his mother, whole province it undoubtedly was to manage the nurture of her own child; while the herfelf refumed her operations upon the commodore, whom the was refolved at any rate to captivate and enflave. And it must be owned, that Mrs. Grizzle's knowledge of the human heart never fhone fo confpicuous, as in the methods fhe purfued for the accomplishment of this important aim.

Through the rough unpolified hufk that cafed the foul of Trunnion, fhe could eafily diftinguifh a large fhare of that vanity and felf-conceit that generally predominate even in the molt favage breaft; and to this fhe conftantly appealed. In his prefence fhe always exclaimed againft the craft and diffioneft diffimulation of the world, and never failed of uttering particular invectives againft thofe arts of chicanery in which the lawyers are fo converfant, to the prejudice and ruin of their fellow-creatures; obferving, that, in a fea-faring life, fo far as fhe had opportunities of judging or being informed, there was nothing but friendfhip, fincerity, and a hearty contempt for every thing that was mean or felfifh.

This kind of convertation, with the affiftance of certain particular civilities, infenfibly made an imprefion on the mind of the commodore, and that the more effectually, as his former prepofieffions were built upon very flender foundations: His antipathy to old maids, which he had conceived upon hearfay, began gradually to di-Vol. II. minifh, when he found they were not quite fuch infernal animals as they had been reprefented; and it was not long before he was heard to obferve at the club, that Pickle's fifter had not fo much of the core of bitch in her as he had imagined. This negative compliment, by the medium of her brother, foon reached the ears of Mrs. Grizzle, who, thus encouraged, redoubled all her arts and attention; fo that, in lefs than three months after, he in the fame place diffinguithed her with the epithet of a damned fenfible jade.

Hatchway taking the alarm at this declaration, which he feared foreboded fomething fatal to his interest, told his commander, with a fneer, that fhe had fenfe enough to bring him to under her ftern; and he did not doubt but that fuch an old crazy veffel would be the better for being taken in tow. "But, howfomever," added this arch advifer, "I'd have you take care of your upper works; for if once you are made fast to her poop, egad ! fhe'll fpank it away, and make every beam in your body crack with ftraining." Our fhe-projector's whole plan had like to have been ruined by the effect which this malicious hint had upon Trunnion, whofe rage and fufpicion being wakened at once, his colour changed from tawny to a cadaverous pale, and then fhifting to a deep and dufky red, fuch as we fometimes obferve in the fky when it is replete with thunder, he, after his ufual preamble of unmeaning oaths, answered in these words : " Damn ye, you jury-legged dog, you would give all the flowage in your hold to be as found as I am; and as for being taken in tow, d'ye fee, I'm not fo difabled but that I can lie my courfe, and perform my voyage without any affiftance; and, egad ! no man shall ever fee Hawfer Trunnion lagging aftern in the wake of e'cr a bitch in Chriftendom.

Mrs. Grizzle, who every morning interrogated her brother with regard to the fubject of his over-night's converfation with his friends, foon received the unwelcome news of the commodore's averfion to matrimony; and, juftly imputing the greateft part of his difguft to the fatirical infinuations of Mr. Hatchway, refolved to level this obftruction to her fuccefs, and actually found means to intereft him in her feheme. She had indeed, on fome occasions a particular knack at making converts, being probably not unacquainted with that grand fystem of perfuafion, which is adopted by the greateft perfonages of the age, as fraught with maxims much more effectual than all the eloquence of Tully or Demofthenes, even when fupported by the demonstrations of truth : Befides, Mr. Hatchway's fidelity to his new ally was confirmed by his forefeeing in his captain's marriage an infinite fund of gratification for his own cynical difpolition. Thus, therefore, converted and properly cautioned, he for the future fupprefied all the virulence of his wit against the matrimonial state; and, as he knew not how to open his mouth in the politive praife of any perfon whatever, took all opportunities of excepting Mrs. Grizzle by name from the cenfures he liberally bestowed upon the rest of her fex. " She is not a drunkard, like Nan Caffick of Deptford (he would fay); not a nincompoop, like Peg Simper of Woolwich; not a brimftone, like Kate Coddie of Chatham; nor a fhrew, like Nell Griffin on the Point at Portfmouth (ladics to whom, at different times, they had both paid their addreffes); but a tight, good-humoured, fenfible wench, who knows very well how to box her compass; well trimmed aloft, and well sheathed alow, with a good cargo under her hatches." The commodore at first imagined this commendation was ironical, but hearing it repeated again and again, was filled with aftonishment at this furprising change in the lieutenant's behaviour; and, after a long fit of muling, concluded that Hatchway himfelf harboured a matrimonial defign on the perfon of Mrs. Grizzle.

Pleafed with this conjecture, he rallied Jack in his turn, and one night toafted her health as a compliment to his paffion; a circumftance which the lady learned next day by the ufual canal of her intelligence, and interpreting as the refult of his own tendernefs for her, the congratulated herfelf upon the victory the had obtained; and, thinking it unneceffary to continue the referve the had hitherto induftrioufly affected, refolved from that day to fweeten her behaviour towards him with fuch a difh of affection, as could not fail to perfuade him that he had infpired her with a reciprocal flame. In confequence of this determination, he was invited to dinner, and, while he ftaid, treated with fuch cloying proofs of her regard, that not only the reft of the company, but even Trunnion himfelf, perceived her drift; and, taking the alarm accordingly, could not help exclaiming, "Oho! I fee how the land lies, and, if I don't weather the point, I'll be damned." Having thus expressed himfelf to his afflicted inamorata, he made the best of his way to the garrifon, in which he thut himfelf up for the space of ten days, and had no communication with his friends and domestics but by looks, which were most fignificantly pictures for the space of the s

CHAPTER VII.

Divers firatagems are invented and put in practice, in order to overcome the obflinacy of Trunnion, who at length is teafed and tortured into the noofe of wedlock.

THIS abrubt departure and unkind declaration affected Mrs. Grizzle fo much, that fhe fell fick of forrow and mortification; and, after having confined herfelf to her bed for three days, fent for her brother, told him fhe perceived her end drawing near, and defired that a lawver might be brought, in order to write her last will. Mr. Pickle, furprifed at her demand, began to act the part of a comforter, affuring her that her diftemper was not at all dangerous; and that he would inftantly fend for a phyfician, who would convince her that fhe was in no manner of jeopardy; fo that there was no occasion at prefent to employ an officious attorney in fuch a melancholy tafk. Indeed, this affectionate brother was of opinion, that a will was altogether fuperfluous at any rate, as he himfelf was heir at law to his fifter's whole real and perfonal eftate. But fhe infifted upon his compliance with fuch determined obftinacy, that he could no longer refift her importunities; and a feriviner arriving, the dictated and executed her will, in which the bequeathed to Commodore Trunnion one thousand pounds, to purchafe a mourning ring, which the hoped he would wear as a pledge of her friendship and affection. Her brother, though he did not much relift this teftimony of her love, neverthelefs that fame evening gave an account of this particular to Mr. Hatchway, who was alfo, as Mr. Pickle affured him, generoutly remembered by the teftatrix.

The lieutenant, fraught with this piece of intelligence, watched for an opportunity, and as foon as he perceived the commodore's features a little unbended from that ferocious contraction they had retained fo long, ventured to inform him that Pickle's fifter lay at the point of death, and that fhe had left him a thoufand pounds in her will. This piece of news overwhelmed him with confusion, and Mr. Hatchway imputing his filence to remorfe, refolved to take advantage of that favourable moment, and counfelled him to go and vifit the poor young woman, who was dying for love of him. But his admonition happened to be fomewhat unfeafonable; for Trunnion no fooner heard him mention the caufe of her diforder, than, his morofity recurring, he burft out into a violent fit of curfing, and forthwith betook himfelf again to his hammock, where he lay uttering, in a low growling tone of voice, a repetition of oaths and imprecations, for the fpace of four and twenty hours, without ceafing. This was a delicious meal to the lieutenant, who, eager to enhance the pleafure of the entertainment, and, at the fame time, conduce to the fuccefs of the caufe he had efpoufed, invented a ftratagem, the execution of which had all the effect he could defire. He prevailed upon Pipes, who was devoted to his fervice, to get upon the top of the chimney belonging to the commodore's chamber, at midnight, and to lower down by a rope a bunch of ftinking whitings; which being performed, he put a fpeaking trumpet to his mouth, and hollowed down the vent, in a voice like thunder, " Trunnion ! Trunnion ! turn out and be fpliced, or lie ftill and be damned." This dreadful note, the terror of which was increased by the filence and darknefs of the night, as well as the echo of the paffage through which it was conveyed, no fooner reached the ears of the aftonished commodore, than turning his eye towards the place from whence this folemn addrefs feemed to proceed, he beheld a glittering object that vanished in an instant. Just as his superstitious fear had improved the apparition into tonie fupernatural meffenger C iii clothed in fhining array, his opinion was confirmed by a fudden explosion, which he took for thunder, though it was no other than the noife of a piftol fired down the chimney by the boatfwain's mate, according to the inftructions he had received; and he had time enough to defcend before he was in any danger of being detected by his commander, who could not for a whole hour recollect himfelf from the amazement and confernation which had overpowered his faculties.

At length, however, he got up, and rung his bell with great agitation. He repeated the fummons more than once; but no regard being paid to this alarm, his dread returned with double terror; a cold fweat bedewed his limbs, his knees knocked together, his hair briftled up, and the remains of his teeth were fhattered to pieces in the convultive vibrations of his jaws.

In the midft of this agony, he made one defperate effort, and, burfting open the door of his apartment, bolted into Hatchway's chamber, which happened to be on the fame floor. There he found the lieutenant in a counterfeit fwoon, who pretended to wake from his trance in an ejaculation of "Lord have mercy upon us!" And, being queftioned by the terrified commodore, with regard to what had happened, affured him he had heard the fame voice and clap of thunder by which Trunnion himfelf had been difcompofed.

Pipes, whole turn it was to watch, concurred in giving evidence to the fame purpole; and the commodore not only owned that he had heard the voice, but likewife communicated his vision, with all the aggravation which his diffurbed fancy fuggefted.

A confultation immediately enfued, in which Mr. Hatchway very gravely obferved, that the finger of God was plainly perceivable in those fignals; and that it would be both finful and foolish to difregard his commands, especially as the match proposed was, in all respects, more advantageous than any that one of his years and infirmities could reasonably expect; declaring, that, for his own part, he would not endanger his foul and body, by living one day longer under the same roof with a man who defpifed the holy will of heaven; and Tom Pipes adhered to the same pious resolution. Trunnion's perfeverance could not refift the number and diverfity of confiderations that affaulted it; he revolved in filence all the oppofite motives that occurred to his reflection; and after having been, to all appearance, bewildered in the labyrinth of his own thoughts, he wiped the fweat from his forehead, and, heaving a piteous groan, yielded to their remonftrances, in thefe words: "Well, tince it muft be fo, I think we muft e'en grapple. But, damn my eyes! 'tis a damn'd hard cafe that a fellow of my years fhould be compelled, d'ye fee, to beat up to windward all the reft of his life, againft the current of his own inclination."

This important article being difcuffed, Mr. Hatchway fet out in the morning to vifit the defpairing fhepherdefs, and was handfomely rewarded for the enlivening tidings with which he bleffed her ears. Sick as fhe was, fhe could not help laughing heartily at the contrivance, in confequence of which her fwain's affent had been obtained, and gave the lieutenant ten guineas for Tom Pipes, in confideration of the part he acted in the farce.

In the afternoon, the commodore fuffered himfelf to be conveyed to her apartment, like a felon to execution, and was received by her in a languishing manner, and genteel defhabille, accompanied by her fifter-in-law, who was, for very obvious reasons, extremely folicitous about her fuccefs. Though the lieutenant had tutored him, touching his behaviour at this interview, he made a thoufand wry faces before he could pronounce the fimple falutation of How d'ye? to his miftrefs; and, after his counfellor had urged him with twenty or thirty whifpers, to each of which he had replied aloud, " Damn your eyes, I won't," he got up, and halting towards the couch on which Mrs. Grizzle reclined in a ftate of ftrange expectation, he feized her hand, and prefied it to his lips; but this piece of gallantry he performed in fuch a reluctant, uncouth, indignant manner, that the nymph had need of all her refolution to endure the compliment without fhrinking; and he himfelf was fo difconcerted at what he had done, that he inftantly retired to the other end of the room, where he fat filent, broiling with fhame and vexation. Mrs. Pickle, like a fenfible matron, quitted the place, on pretence of going to the nurfery; and C iiij

Mr. Hatchway, taking the hint, recollected that he had left his tobacco pouch in the parlour, whither he immediately defcended, leaving the two lovers to their mutual endearments. Never had the commodore found himfelf in fuch a difagreeable dilemma before. He fat in an agony of fuspense, as if he every moment dreaded the diffolution of nature; and the imploring fighs of his future bride added, if possible, to the pangs of his diffrefs. Impatient of his fituation, he rolled his eye around in quest of fome relief, and unable to contain himfelf, exclaimed, " Damnation feize the fellow and his pouch too! I believe he has fheered off, and left me here in the flays." Mrs. Grizzle, who could not help taking fome notice of this manifestation of chagrin, lamented her unhappy fate in being fo difagreeable to him, that he could not put up with her company for a few moments without repining; and began in very tender terms to reproach him with his inhumanity and indifference. To this expotulation he replied, "Zounds ! what would the woman have ? Let the parfon do his office when he wool; here I am ready to be reeved in the matrimonial block, d'ye fee, and damn all nonfenfical palaver." So faying, he retreated, leaving his miftrefs not at all difobliged at his plain dealing. That fame evening the treaty of marriage was brought upon the carpet, and, by means of Mr. Pickle and the lieutenant, fettled to the fatisfaction of all parties, without the intervention of lawyers, whom Mr. Trunnion expressly excluded from all fhare in the bufiness; making that condition the indifpenfable preliminary of the whole agreement. Things being brought to this bearing, Mrs. Grizzle's heart dilated with joy; her health, which, by the by, was never dangeroufly impaired, fhe recovered as if by inchantment; and a day being fixed for the nuptials, employed the fhort period of her celibacy in choosing ornaments for the celebration of her entrance into the married ftate.

CHAPTER VIII.

Preparations are made for the commodore's wedding, which is delayed by an accident that hurried him the Lord knows whither.

THE fame of this extraordinary conjunction fpread all over the county; and on the day appointed for their fpoufals, the church was furrounded by an inconceivable multitude. The commodore, to give a fpccimen of his gallantry, by the advice of his friend Hatchway, refolved to appear on horfeback on the grand occasion, at the head of all his male attendants, whom he had rigged with the white fhirts and black caps formerly belonging to his barge's crew; and he bought a couple of hunters for the accommodation of himfelf and his lieutenant. With this equipage then he fet out from the garrifon for the church, after having defpatched a meffenger to apprife the bride that he and his company were mounted. She got immediately into the coach, accompanied by her brother and his wife, and drove directly to the place of affignation, where feveral pews were demolifhed, and divers perfons almost prefied to death, by the eagerness of the crowd that broke in to fee the ceremony performed. Thus arrived at the altar, and the prieft in attendance, they waited a whole half hour for the commodore, at whole flownels they began to be under fome apprehenfion, and accordingly difmiffed a fervant to quicken his pace. The valet having rode fomething more than a mile, efpied the whole troop difpofed in a long field, croffing the road obliquely, and headed by the bridegroom and his friend Hatchway, who, finding himfelf hindered by a hedge from proceeding farther in the fame direction, fired a piftol, and ftood over to the other fide, making an obtufe angle with the line of his former courfe; and the reft of the fquadron followed his example, keeping always in the rear of each other like a flight of wild geefe.

Surprifed at this ftrange method of journeying, the meffenger came up, and told the commodore that his lady and her company expected him in the church, where they had tarried a confiderable time, and were beginning to be very uneafy at his delay; and therefore defired he would proceed with more expedition. To this meffage Mr. Trunnion replied, "Hark ye, brother, don't you fee we make all poffible fpeed ? go back, and tell thofe who fent you, that the wind has flifted fince we weighed anchor, and that we are obliged to make very fhort trips in tacking, by reafon of the narrownefs of the channel; and that, as we lie within fix points of the wind, they must make fome allowance for variation and leeway." " Lord, fir ! faid the valet, what occasion have you to go zig-zag in that manner? Do but clap fpurs to your horfes, and ride ftraight forward, and I'll engage you shall be at the church-porch in lefs than a quarter of an hour." "What! right in the wind's eye? (anfwered the commander) ahey ! brother, where did you learn your navigation ? Hawfer Trunnion is not to be taught at this time of day how to lie his courfe, or keep his own reckoning. And as for you, brother, you best know the trim of your own frigate." The courier finding he had to do with people who would not be eafily perfuaded out of their own opinions, returned to the temple, and made a report of what he had feen and heard, to the no fmall confolation of the bride, who had begun to difcover fome figns of difquiet. Composed, however, by this piece of intelligence, fhe exerted her patience for the fpace of another half hour, during which period, feeing no bridegroom arrive, fhe was exceedingly alarmed; fo that all the fpectators could cafily perceive her perturbation, which manifested itself in frequent palpitations, heart-heavings, and alterations of countenance, in fpite of the affiftance of a fmelling-bottle, which fhe inceffantly applied to her nostrils.

Various were the conjectures of the company on this occasion: Some imagined he had mistaken the place of rendezvous, as he had never been at church fince he first fettled in that parish; others believed he had met with fome accident, in confequence of which his attendants had carried him back to his own house; and a third fet, in which the bride herfelf was thought to be comprehended, could not help fuspecting that the commodore had changed his mind. But all these fuspositions, ingenious as they were, happened to be wide of the true cause that detained him, which was no other than this: -The commodore and his crew had, by dint of turning, almost weathered the parfon's house that stood to windward of the church, when the notes of a pack of hounds unluckily reached the ears of the two hunters which Trunnion and the lieutenant bestrode. These fleet animals no fooner heard the enlivening found, than, eager for the chafe, they fprung away all of a fudden, and ftrained every nerve to partake of the iport, flew across the fields with incredible fpeed, overleaped hedges and ditches, and every thing in their way, without the least regard to their unfortunate riders. The lieutenant, whole fteed had got the heels of the other, finding it would be great folly and prefumption in him to pretend to keep the faddle with his wooden lcg, very wifely took the opportunity of throwing himfelf off in his paffage through a field of rich clover, among which he lay at his cafe'; and feeing his captain advancing at full gallop, hailed him with the falutation of "What cheer? ho !" The commodore, who was in infinite diffrefs, eyeing him afkance, as he paffed, replied with a faltering voice, "O damn you ! you are fafe at an anchor; I with to God I were as fait moored." Neverthelefs, confcious of his difabled heel, he would not venture to try the experiment which had fucceeded fo well with Hatchway, but refolved to flick as clofe as poffible to his horfe's back, until Providence fhould interpofe in his behalf. With this view he dropped his whip, and with his right hand laid fast hold on the pummel, contracting every muscle in his body to fecure himself in the feat, and grinning most formidably, in confequence of this exertion. In this attitude he was hurried on a confiderable way, when all of a fudden his view was comforted by a five bar gate that appeared before him, as he never doubted that there the career of his hunter must neceffarily end. But, alas! he reckoned without his hoft : Far from halting at this obstruction, the horse sprung over it with amazing agility, to the utter confusion and diforder of his owner, who loft his hat and periwig in the leap, and now began to think in good earnest that he was actually mounted on the back of the devil. He recommended himfelf to God, his reflection forfook him, his eyelight and all his other fenfes failed, he quitted the reins, and, fastening by instinct on the mane, was in this condition conveyed into the midft of the fportfmen, who were aftonished at the fight of fuch an apparition. Neither was their furprife to be wondered at, if we reflect on the figure that prefented itfelf to their view. The commodore's perfon was at all times an object of admiration; much more fo on this occasion, when every fingularity was aggravated by the circumstances of his drefs and difaster.

He had put on, in honour of his nuptials, his best coat of blue broad cloth, cut by a tailor of Ramfgate, and trimmed with five dozen of brafs buttons, large and fmall; his breeches were of the fame piece, fastened at the knees with large bunches of tape; his waiftcoat was of red plufh, lapelled with green velvet, and garnifhed with vellum holes; his boots bore an infinite refemblance, both in colour and fhape, to a pair of leather buckets; his fhoulder was graced with a broad buff belt, from whence depended a huge hanger, with a hilt like that of a backfword; and on each fide of his pummel appeared a rufty piftol, rammed in a cafe covered with a bearfkin. The lofs of his tie periwig and laced hat, which were curiofities of the kind, did not at all contribute to the improvement of the picture, but, on the contrary, by exhibiting his bald pate, and the natural extension of his lanthorn jaws, added to the peculiarity and extravagance of the whole. Such a spectacle could not have failed of diverting the whole company from the chafe, had his horfe thought proper to purfue a different route, but the beaft was too keen a fporter to choofe any other way than that which the ftag followed; and therefore, without stopping to gratify the curiofity of the spectators, he, in a few minutes, outstripped every hunter in the field. There being a deep hollow way betwixt him and the hounds, rather than ride round about the length of a furlong to a path that croffed the lane, he transported himfelf, at one jump, to the unfpeakable aftonithment and terror of a waggoner who chanced to be underneath, and faw this phenomenon fly over his carriage. This was not the only adventure he achieved. The ftag having taken a deep river that lay in his way, every man directed his courfe to a bridge in the neighbourhood; but our bridegroom's courfer, defpifing all fuch conveniencies, plunged into the ftream without hefitation, and fwam in a twinkling to the oppofite fhore. This fudden immerfion into an element, of which Trunnion was properly a native, in all probability helped to recruit the exhaufted fpirits of his rider, who, at his landing on the other fide, gave fome tokens of fenfation, by hollowing aloud for alliftance, which he could not poffibly receive, becaufe his horfe ftill maintained the advantage he had gained, and would not allow himfelf to be overtaken.

In fhort, after a long chafe, that lafted feveral hours, and extended to a dozen miles at leaft, he was the first in at the death of the deer, being feconded by the lieutenant's gelding, which, actuated by the fame fpirit, had, without a rider, followed his companion's example.

Our bridegroom finding himfelf at laft brought up, or, in other words, at the end of his career, took the opportunity of the first pause, to defire the huntsseen would lend him a hand in disfmounting; and was by their condescension fastely placed on the grass, where he fat staring at the company as they came in, with such wildness of astonishment in his looks, as if he had been a creature of another species, dropt among them from the clouds.

Before they had flefhed the hounds, however, he recollected himfelf, and feeing one of the fportfmen take a fmall flafk out of his pocket and apply it to his mouth, judged the cordial to be no other than neat Coniac, which it really was! and exprefling a defire of participation, was immediately accommodated with a moderate defe, which perfectly completed his recovery.

By this time he and his two horfes had engroffed the attention of the whole crowd; while fome admired the elegant proportion and uncommon fpirit of the two animals, the reft contemplated the furprifing appearance of their mafter, whom before they had only feen en paffant; and at length one of the gentlemen accofting him very courteoufly, fignified his wonder at feeing him in fuch an equipage, and afked him if he had not dropped his companion by the way. "Why, look ye, brother (replied the commodore), mayhap you think me an odd fort of a fellow, feeing me in this trim, efpecially as I have loft part of my rigging; but this here is the cafe, d'ye fee : I weighed anchor from my own houfe this morning at ten A. M. with fair weather and a favourable breeze at fouth-fouth-caft, being bound to the next church on the voyage of matrimony; but howfomever, we had not run down a quarter of a league, when the wind fhifting, blowed directly in our teeth; fo that we were forced to tack all the way, d'ye fee, and had almost beat up within fight of the port, when these fons of bitches of horfes, which I had bought but two days before (for my own part, I believe they are devils incarnate), luffed round in a trice, and then refufing the helm, drove away like lightning with me and my lieutenant, who foon came to anchor in an exceeding good birth. As for my own part, I have been carried over rocks, and flats, and quick-fands; among which I have pitched away a special good tie periwig, and an iron bound hat; and at laft, thank God ! am got into fmooth water and fafe riding; but if ever I venture my carcafs upon fuch a hare'um fcare'um blood of a bitch again, my name is not Hawfer Trunnion, damn my eycs !"

One of the company, ftruck with this name, which he had often heard, immediately laid hold on his declaration at the close of this fingular account; and obferving that his horfes were very vitious, afked how he intended to return? " As for that matter (replied Mr. Trunnion), I am refolved to hire a fledge or waggon, or fuch a thing as a jack-afs; for I'll be damn'd if ever I crofs the back of a horfe again." " And what do you propofe to do with these creatures? (faid the other, pointing to the hunters) they feem to have fome mettle; but then they are more colts, and will take the devil and all of breaking. Methinks this hinder one is fhoulder-flippcd." " Damn them (cried the commodore), I with both their necks were broke, thof the two coft me forty good yellow-boys." " Forty guineas! (exclaimed the ftranger, who was a 'fquire and a jockey, as well as owner of the pack) Lord ! Lord ! how a man may be impofed upon! Why, thefe cattle are clumfy enough to go to plough; mind what a flat counter; do but obferve how fharp this here one is in the withers; then he's fired in the further fetlock." In fhort, this connoiffcur in horfefieth, having difcovered in them all the defects which can poffibly be found in that fpecies of animals, offered to give him ten guineas for the two, faying he would convert them into beafts of burden.—The owner, who (after what had happened) was very well difpofed to liften to any thing that was faid to their prejudice, implicitly believed the truth of the ftranger's affeverations, difcharged a furious volley of oaths againft the rafcal who had taken him in, and forthwith ftruck a bargain with the 'fquire, who paid him inftantly for his purchafe; in confequence of which he won the plate at the next Canterbury races.

This affair being transacted to the mutual fatisfaction of both parties, as well as to the general entertainment of the company, who laughed in their fleeves at the dexterity of their friend, Trunnion was fet upon the 'Iquire's own horfe, and led by his fervant in the midft of this cavalcade, which proceeded to a neighbouring village, where they had befpoke dinner, and where our bridegroom found means to provide himfelf with another hat and wig. With regard to his marriage, he bore his difappointment with the temper of a philosopher; and the exercise he had undergone having quickened his appetite, fat down at table in the midft of his new acquaintance, making a very hearty meal, and moistening every morfel with a draught of the ale, which he found very much to his fatisfaction.

CHAPTER IX.

He is found by the lieutenent; reconducted to his own houfe; married to Mrs. Grizzle, who meets with a fmall misfortune in the night, and afferts her prerogative next morning; in confequence of which, her hufband's eye is endangered.

MEANWHILE Lieutenant Hatchway made fhift to hobble to the church, where he informed the company of what had happened to the commodore; and the bride behaved with great decency on the occasion; for, as foon as the understood the danger to which her future husband was exposed, the fainted in the arms of her fifter-in-law, to the furprife of all the fpectators, who could not comprehend the caufe of her diforder; and when fhe was recovered by the application of fmelling bottles, earneftly begged that Mr. Hatchway and Tom Pipes would take her brother's coach, and go in queft of their commander.

This talk they readily undertook, being efforted by all the reft of his adherents on horfeback; while the bride and her friends were invited to the parfon's houfe, and the ceremony deferred till another occasion.

The lieutenant, fteering his courfe as near the line of direction in which Trunnion went off, as the coachroad would permit, got intelligence of his track from one farm-house to another; for fuch an apparition could not fail of attracting particular notice; and one of the horfemen having picked up his hat and wig in a bye path, the whole troop entered the village where he was lodged, about four o'clock in the afternoon. When they underftood he was fafely houfed at the George, they rode up to the door in a body, and expressed their fatisfaction in three cheers; which were returned by the company within, as foon as they were inftructed in the nature of the falute by Trunnion, who by this time had entered into all the jollity of his new friends, and was indeed more than half leas over. The lieutenant was introduced to all prefent as his fworn brother, and had fomething tofled up for his dinner. Tom Pipes and the crew were regaled in another room; and a fresh pair of horfes being put to the coach, about fix in the evening the commodore, with all his attendants, departed for the garrifon, after having fhook hands with every individual in the houfe.

Without any farther accident, he was conveyed in fafety to his own gate, before nine, and committed to the care of Pipes, who carried him inftantly to his hammock, while the lieutenant was driven away to the place where the bride and her friends remained in great anxiety, which vanifhed when he affured them that his commodore was fafe, being fucceeded by abundance of mirth and pleafantry at the account he gave of Trunnion's adventure.

Another day was fixed for the nuptials; and, in order to baulk the curiofity of idle people, which had given great offence, the parson was prevailed upon to perform the ceremony in the garrifon, which all that day was adorned with flags and pendants difplayed, and at night illuminated by the direction of Hatchway, who alfo ordered the patereroes to be fired as foon as the marriage knot was tied. Neither were the other parts of the entertainment neglected by this ingenious contriver, who produced undeniable proofs of his elegance and art in the wedding fupper, which had been committed to his management and direction. This genial banquet was entirely composed of fea-difhes; a huge pillaw, confifting of a large piece of beef fliced, a couple of fowls, and half a peck of rice, fmoked in the middle of the board; a difh of hard fifh fwimming in oil, appeared at each end, the fides being furnished with a mets of that favoury compolition known by the name of lob's course, and a plate of falmagundy. The fecond courfe difplayed a goofe of a monstrous magnitude, flanked with two Guinea hens, a pig barbecu'd, an hock of falt pork in the midft of a peafe pudding, a leg of mutton roafted, with potatoes, and another boiled with yams. The third fervice was made up with a loin of fresh pork with apple saufe, a kid fmothered with onions, and a terrapin baked in the fhell; and laft of all, a prodigious fea pye was prefented, with an infinite volume of pancakes and fritters. That every thing might be answerable to the magnificence of this delicate feast, he had provided vast quantities of strong beer, flip, rumbo, and burnt brandy, with plenty of Barbadoes water, for the ladies; and hired all the fiddles within fix miles, who, with the addition of a drum, bagpipe, and Welch harp, regaled the guefts with a most melodious concert.

The company, who were not at all exceptious, feemed extremely well pleafed with every particular of the entertainment; and the evening being fpent in the moft focial manner, the bride was by her fifter conducted to her apartment, where, however, a trifling circumitance had like to have deftroyed the harmony which had been hitherto maintained.

I have already obferved, that there was not one flanding bed within the walls; therefore the reader will not wonder that Mrs. Trunnion was out of humour, when fhe found herfelf under the neceffity of being confined Vol. II. D with her fpoufe in a hammock, which, though enlarged with a double portion of canvafs, and dilated with a yoke for the occafion, was at beft but a difagreeable, not to fay dangerous, fituation. She accordingly complained with fome warmth of this inconvenience, which fhe imputed to difrefpect, and at first abfolutely refused to put up with the expedient; but Mrs. Pickle foon brought her to reason and compliance, by observing that one night would foon be elapfed, and next day fhe might regulate her own economy.

Thus perfuaded, the ventured into the vehicle, and was visited by her hufband in lefs than an hour, the company being departed to their own homes, and the garrifon left to the command of his lieutenant and mate. But it feems the hooks that fupported this fwinging couch were not calculated for the addition of weight which they were now defined to bear; and therefore gave way in the middle of the night, to the no fmall terror of Mrs. Trunnion, who perceiving herfelf falling, fcreamed aloud, and by that exclamation brought Hatchway, with a light, into the chamber. Though fhe had received no injury by the fall, the was extremely difcomposed and incenfed at the accident, which she even openly afcribed to the obftinacy and whimfical oddity of the commodore, in fuch petulant terms as evidently deelared that the thought her great aim accomplished, and her authority fecured against all the shocks of fortune. Indeed her bedfellow feemed to be of the fame opinion, by his tacit refignation; for he made no reply to her infinuations, but with a most vinegar aspect, crawled out of his neft, and betook himfelf to reft in another apartment, while his irritated fpoufe difmified the lieutenant, and from the wreck of the hammock made an occasional bed for herfelf on the floor, fully determined to provide better accommodation for the next night's lodging.

Having no inclination to fleep, her thoughts, during the remaining part of the night, were engroffed by a fcheme of reformation fhe was refolved to execute in the family; and no fooner did the first lark bid falutation to the morn, than, ftarting from her humble couch, and huddling on her clothes, fhe fallied from her chamber, explored her way through paths before unknown, and in the course of her refearches, perceived a large bell, to which the made fuch effectual application, as alarmed every foul in the family. In a moment the was furrounded by Hatchway, Pipes, and all the reft of the fervants, half-dreffed; but feeing none of the feminine gender appear, the began to ftorm at the floth and lazinefs of the maids, who, the obferved, ought to have been at work an hour at leaft before the called; and then, for the first time, underftood that no woman was permitted to fleep within the walls.

She did not fail to exclaim against this regulation; and being informed that the cook and chambermaid lodged in a fmall office-houfe, that ftood without the gate, ordered the draw-bridge to be let down, and in perfon beat up their quarters, commanding them forthwith to fet about fcouring the rooms, which had not been hitherto kept in a very decent condition, while two men were immediately employed to transport the bed on which the ufed to lie, from her brother's houfe to her new habitation; fo that, in lefs than two hours, the whole economy of the garrifon was turned topfy-turvy, and every thing involved in tumult and noife .---Trunnion being diffurbed and diffracted with the uproar, turned out in his fhirt like a maniac, and arming himfelf with a cudgel of crab-tree, made an irruption into his wife's apartment, where perceiving a couple of carpenters at work, in joining a bedftead, he, with many dreadful oaths and opprobrious invectives, ordered them to defift, fwearing, he would fuffer no bulk-heads nor hurricane houses to stand where he was master; but finding his remonstrances difregarded by these mechanics, who believed him to be fome madman belonging to the family, who had broke from his confinement, he affaulted them both with great fury and indignation, and was handled fo roughly in the encounter, that, in a very fhort time, he meafured his length on the floor, in confequence of a blow that he received from a hammer, by which the fight of his remaining eye was grievoufly endangered.

Having thus reduced him to a ftate of fubjection, they refolved to fecure him with cords, and were actually bufy in adjufting his fetters, when he was exempted from the difgrace, by the accidental entrance of his fpoufe, who refcued him from the hands of his adverfaries, and, in the midft of her condolence, imputed his misfortune to the inconfiderate roughnefs of his own difposition.

He breathed nothing but revenge, and made fome efforts to chaftife the infolence of the workmen, who, as foon as they underftood his quality, afked forgivenets for what they had done, with great humility, protefting that they did not know he was mafter of the houfe. But, far from being fatisfied with this apology, he groped about for the bell (the inflammation of his eye having utterly deprived him of fight), and the rope being, by the precaution of the delinquents, conveyed out of his reach, began to ftorm with incredible vociferation, like a lion roaring in the toil, pouring forth innumerable oaths and execrations, and calling by name Hatchway and Pipes, who, being within hearing, obeyed the extraordinary fummons, and were ordered to put the carpenters in irons, for having audacioufly aflaulted him in his own houfe.

His myrmidons feeing he had been cvil-entreated, were exafperated at the infult he had fuffered, which they confidered as an affront upon the dignity of the garrifon: the more fo, as the mutineers feemed to put themfelves in a pofture of defence, and fet their authority at defiance: They therefore unfheathed their cutlaffes, which they commonly wore as badges of their commiffion; and a defperate engagement, in all probability, would have enfued, had not the lady of the caftle interpofed, and prevented the effects of their animofity, by affuring the lieutenant that the commodore had been the aggreffor, and that the workmen finding themfelves attacked in fuch an extraordinary manner, by a perfon whom they did not know, were obliged to act in their own defence, by which he had received that unlucky contufion.

Mr. Hatchway no fooner learnt the fentiments of Mrs. Trunnion, than fheathing his indignation, he told the commodore that he fhould always be ready to execute his lawful commands, but that he could not in confeience be concerned in opprefing poor people who had been guilty of no offence.

This unexpected declaration, together with the behaviour of his wife, who in his hearing defired the carpenters to refume their work, filled the breaft of Trunnion with rage and mortification. He pulled off his woollen night-cap, pummell'd his bare pate, beat the floor alternately with his feet, fwore his people had betrayed him, and curfed himfelf to the lowest pit of hell, for having admitted fuch a cockatrice into his family. But all these exclamations did not avail; they were among the laft effays of his reliftance to the will of his wife, whole influence among his adherents had already fwallowed up his own, and who now peremptorily told him, that he must leave the management of every thing within doors to her, who understood best what was for his honour and advantage. She then ordered a poultice to be prepared for his eye, which being applied, he was committed to the care of Pipes, by whom he was led about the houfe like a blind bear growling for prey, while his industrious yoke-fellow executed every circumstance of the plan she had projected; fo that, when he recovered his vilion, he was an utter ftranger in his own houfe.

CHAPTER X.

The commodore being in fome cafes reflive, his lady has recourfe to artifice in the eftablifhment of her throne. She exhibits fymptoms of pregnancy, to the unfpeakable joy of Trunnion, who neverthelefs is baulked in his expectation.

THESE innovations were not effected without many loud objections on his part; and divers curious dialogues paffed between him and his yoke-fellow, who always came off victorious from the difpute; infomuch that his countenance gradually fell; he began to fupprefs, and at length entirely devoured his chagrin; the terrors of fuperior authority were plainly perceivable in his features, and in lefs than three months he became a thorough-paced hufband. Not that his obftinacy was extinguifhed, though overcome; in fome things he was as inflexible and mulifh as ever; but then he durft not kick fo openly, and was reduced to the neceffity of being paffive in his refentments. Mrs. Trunnion, for example, propofed that a coach and fix fhould be purchafed, as fhe could not ride on horfeback, and the chaife was a fcandalous carriage for a perfon of her condition; the commodore, confcious of his own inferior capacity in point of reafoning, did not think proper to difpute the propofal, but lent a deaf ear to her remonstrances, though they were enforced with every argument which the thought could footh, terrify, thame, or decoy him into compliance : In vain did fhe urge the excefs of affection fhe had for him, as meriting fome return of tendernels and condefcention; he was even proof against certain menacing hints she gave, touching the refentment of a flighted woman; and he ftood out against all the confiderations of dignity or difgrace, like a bulwark of brafs. Neither was he moved to any indecent or unkind expressions of contradiction, even when the upbraided him with his fordid difpolition, and put him in mind of the fortune and honour he had acquired by his marriage, but feemed to retire within himfelf, like a tortoife when attacked, that fhrinks within its fhell, and filently endured the fcourge of her reproaches, without feeming fenfible of the fmart.

This, however, was the only point in which fhe had been baffied fince her nuptials; and as fhe could by no means digeft the mifcarriage, fhe tortured her invention for fome new plan, by which fhe might augment her influence and authority: What her genius refufed was fupplied by accident; for fhe had not lived four months in the garrifon, when fhe was feized with frequent qualms and retchings, her breafts began to harden, and her ftomach to be remarkably prominent; in a word, fhe congratulated herfelf on the fymptoms of her own fertility, and the commodore was transported with joy at the profpect of an heir of his own begetting.

She knew this was the proper feafon for vindicating her own fovereignty, and accordingly employed the means which nature had put in her power. There was not a rare piece of furniture and apparel for which fhe did not long; and one day as fhe went to church, feeing Lady Stately's equipage arrive, fhe fuddenly fainted away. Her huíband, whofe vanity had never been fo perfectly gratified as with this promifed harveft of his own fowing, took the alarm immediately, and in order to prevent relapfes of that kind, which might be attended with fatal confequences to his hope, gave her leave to befpeak a coach, horfes, and liveries, to her own liking. Thus authorifed, the in a very little time exhibited fuch a fpecimen of her own tafte and magnificence, as afforded fpeculation to the whole country, and made Trunnion's heart quake within him, becaufe he forefaw no limits to her extravagance, which alfo manifefted itfelf in the most expensive preparations for her lying-in.

Her pride, which had hitherto regarded the reprefentative of her father's house, seemed now to lose all that hereditary refpect, and prompt her to outfluine and undervalue the elder branch of her family. She behaved to Mrs. Pickle with a fort of civil referve that implied a confcious fuperiority, and an emulation in point of grandeur immediately commenced between the two fifters. She every day communicated her importance to the whole parish, under pretence of taking the air in her coach, and endeavoured to extend her acquaintance among people of fashion. Nor was this an undertaking attended with great difficulty; for all perfons whatever, capable of maintaining a certain appearance, will always find admiffion into what is called the beft company, and be rated in point of character according to their own valuation, without fubjecting their pretentions to the fmalleft doubt or examination. In all her vifits and parties, fhe feized every opportunity of declaring her prefent condition, obferving that fhe was forbid by her phyficians to tafte fuch a pickle, and that fuch a difh was poilon to a woman in her way; nay, where the was on a footing of familiarity, the affected to make wry faces, and complained that the young rogue began to be very unruly, writhing herfelf into divers contortions, as if fhe had been grievoufly incommoded by the metal of this future Trunnion. The hufband himfelf did not behave with all the moderation that might have been expected : At the club he frequently mentioned this circumstance of his own vigour as a pretty fuccefsful feat to be performed by an old fellow of fifty-five, and confirmed the opinion of his ftrength by redoubled fqueezes of the landlord's hand, which never failed of extorting a fatisfactory certificate of his might. When his companions drank to the Hans en kelder, or Jack in the low cellar, he could not help difplaying an extraordinary complacence of countenance, and fignified his intention of D iiii fending the young dog to fea, as foon as he fhould be able to carry a cartridge, in hopes of feeing him an officer before his own death.

This hope helped to confole him under the extraordinary expense to which he was exposed by the profusion of his wife, efpecially when he confidered that his compliance with her prodigality would be limited to the expiration of the nine months, of which the beft part was by this time elapfed : Yet, in fpite of all this philosophical relignation, her fancy fometimes foared to fuch a ridiculous and intolerable pitch of infolence and abfurdity, that his temper forfook him, and he could not help withing in fecret, that her pride might be confounded in the diffipation of her most flattering hopes, even though he himfelf fhould be a principal fufferer by the difappointment. Thefe, however, were no other than the fuggeftions of temporary difgufts, that commonly fubfided as fuddenly as they arofe, and never gave the leaft diffurbance to the perfon who infpired them, becaufe he took care to conceal them carefully from her knowledge.

Meanwhile fhe happily advanced in her reckoning, with the promife of a favourable iffue; the term of her computation expired, and in the middle of the night fhe was vifited by certain warnings that feemed to befpeak the approach of the critical moment. The commodore got up with great alacrity, and called the midwife, who had been feveral days in the houfe; the goffips were immediately fummoned, and the most interesting expectations prevailed; but the fymptoms of labour gradually vanished, and, as the matrons fagely observed, this was no more than a false alarm.

Two nights after they received a fecond intimation; and as the was fentibly diminifhed in the waift, every thing was fuppoled to be in a fair way: Yet this vifitation was not more conclusive than the former; her pains wore off in fpite of all her endeavours to encourage them, and the good women betook themfelves to their refpective homes, in expectation of finding the third attack decifive, alluding to the well known maxim, that number three is always fortunate. For once, however, this apothegm failed; the next call was altogether as ineffectual as the former; and moreover attended with a phenome; non which to them was equally ftrange and inexplicable: This was no other than fuch a reduction in the fize of Mrs. Trunnion as might have been expected after the birth of a full-grown child. Startled at fuch an unaccountable event, they fat in clofe divan; and, concluding that the cafe was in all refpects unnatural and prodigious, defired that a meffenger might be immediately defpatched for fome male practitioner in the art of midwifery.

The commodore, without gueffing the caufe of their perplexity, ordered Pipes immediately on this piece of duty; and in lefs than two hours they were affifted by the advice of a furgeon of the neighbourhood, who boldly affirmed that the patient had never been with child. This affeveration was like a clap of thunder to Mr. Trunnion, who had been, during eight whole days and nights, in continual expectation of being hailed with the appellation of father.

After fome recollection, he fwore the furgeon was an ignorant fellow, and that he would not take his word for what he advanced, being comforted and confirmed in his want of faith by the infinuations of the midwife, who ftill perfifted to feed Mrs. Trunnion with hopes of a fpeedy and fafe delivery; obferving, that fhe had been concerned in many a cafe of the fame nature, where a fine child was found, even after all figns of the mother's pregnancy had difappeared. Every twig of hope, how flender foever it may be, is eagerly caught hold on by people who find themfelves in danger of being difappointed. To every question proposed by her to the lady with the pream-bles of "Han't you ?" or "Don't you ?" an answer was made in the affirmative, whether agreeable to truth or not; becaufe the refpondent could not find in her heart to difown any fymptom that might favour the notion fhe had fo long indulged.

This experienced proficient in the obstetric art was therefore kept in close attendance for the space of three weeks, during which the patient had several returns of what she pleased herself with believing to be labour pains, till at length she and her husband became the standing joke of the parish; and this infatuated couple could scarce be prevailed upon to part with their hopes, even when she appeared as lank as a greyhound, and they were furnished with other unquefionable proofs of their having been deceived. But they could not for ever remain under the influence of this fweet delufion, which at laft faded away, and was fucceeded by a paroxyfm of fhame and confufion, that kept the hufband within doors for the fpace of a whole fortnight, and confined his lady to her bed for a feries of weeks, during which fhe fuffered all the anguifh of the moft intenfe mortification; yet even this was fubdued by the lenient hand of time.

The first refpite from her chagrin was employed in the strict discharge of what are called the duties of religion, which she performed with the most rancorous severity, fetting on foot a perfecution in her own family, that made the house too hot for all the menial fervants, even ruffled the almost invincible indifference of Tom Pipes, harafied the commodore himself out of all patience, and spared no individual but Lieutenant Hatchway, whom she never ventured to disoblige.

CHAPTER XI.

Mrs. Trunnion erects a tyranny in the garrifon, while her hufband conceives an affection for his nephew Perry, who manifests a peculiarity of difpolition even in his tender years.

HAVING exercifed herfelf three months in fuch pious amusements, she appeared again in the world; but her misfortune had made fuch an impression on her mind, that fhe could not bear the fight of a child, and trembled whenever the converfation happened to turn upon a chriftening. Her temper, which was naturally none of the fweetest, feemed to have imbibed a double proportion of fouring from her disappointment; of confequence her company was not much coveted, and the found very few people disposed to treat her with those marks of confideration which the looked upon as her due. This neglect detached her from the fociety of an unmannerly world; the concentred the energy of all her talents in the government of her own houfe, which groaned accordingly under her arbitrary fway; and, in the brandy bottle, found ample confolation for all the affliction fhe had undergone.

As for the commodore, he in a little time weathered his difgrace, after having fuftained many fevere jokes from the lieutenant; and now his chief aim being to be abfent from his own houfe as much as poffible, he frequented the public houfe more than ever, more affiduoufly cultivated the friendfhip of his brother-in-law Mr. Pickle; and, in the courfe of their intimacy, conceived an affection for his nephew Perry, which did not end but with his life. Indeed it muft be owned that Trunnion was not naturally deficient in the focial paffions of the foul, which, though they were ftrangely warped, difguifed, and overborne, by the circumftance of his boifterous life and education, did not fail to manifeft themfelves occafionally through the whole courfe of his behaviour.

As all the hopes of propagating his own name had perifhed, and his relations lay under the interdiction of his hate, it is no wonder that, through the familiarity and friendly intercourfe fubfifting between him and Mr. Gamaliel, he contracted a liking for the boy, who by this time entered the third year of his age, and was indeed a very handfome, healthy, and promising child; and what feemed to ingratiate him still more with his uncle, was a certain oddity of difpolition, for which he had been remarkable, even from his cradle. It is reported of him, that, before the first year of his infancy was elapsed, he ufed very often, immediately after being dreffed, in the midst of the careffes which were bestowed upon him by his mother, while she indulged herself in the contemplation of her own happinefs, all of a fudden, to alarm her with a fit of fhrieks and cries, which continued with great violence till he was ftripped to the fkin with the utmost expedition, by order of his affrighted parent, who thought his tender body was tortured by the milapplication of fome unlucky pin; and when he had given them all this difturbance and unneceffary trouble, he would lie iprawling and laughing in their faces, as if he ridiculed the impertinence of their concern.) Nay, it is affirmed, that one day, when an old woman, who attended in the nurfery, had by ftealth conveyed a bottle of cordial waters to her mouth, he pulled his nurfe by the fleeve, and, by a flight glance detecting the theft, tipt her the wink with a particular flynefs of countenance, as if he had faid with a fneer, "Ay, ay, that is what you muft all come to." But thefe inflances of reflection in a babe nine months old are fo incredible, that I look upon them as ex post facto obfervations, founded upon imaginary recollection, when he was in a more advanced age, and his peculiarities of temper became much more remarkable—of a piece with the ingenious difcoveries of those fagacious observers who can differ fomething evidently characteristic in the features of any noted perfonage, whose character they have previously heard explained; yet, without pretending to specify at what period of his childhood this singularity first appeared, I can with great truth declare, that, when he first attracted the notice and affection of his uncle, it was plginly perceivable.

One would imagine he had marked out the commodore as a proper object of ridicule, for almost all his little childifh fatire was levelled against him. I will not deny that he might have been influenced in this particular by the example and inftruction of Mr. Hatchway, who delighted in fuperintending the first estays of his genius. As the gout had taken up its refidence in Mr. Trunnion's great toe, from whence it never removed, no not for a day, little Ferry took great pleafure in treading by accident on this infirm member; and when his uncle, incenfed by the pain, ufed to damn him for a hell-begotten brat, he would appeafe him in a twinkling, by returning the curfe with equal emphasis) and alking what was the matter with old Hannibal Tough? an appellation by which the lieutenant had taught him to diftinguish this grim commander.

Neither was this the only experiment he tried upon the patience of the commodore, with whofe nofe he ufed to take indecent freedoms, even while he was fondled on his knee; in one month he put him to the expence of two guineas in feal-fkin, by picking his pocket of divers tobacco pouches, all of which he in fecret committed to the flames. Nor did the caprice of his difpolition abftain from the favourite beverage of Trunnion, who more than once fwallowed a whole draught, in which his brother's fnuff-box had been emptied, before he perceived the difagreeable infufion : And one day, when the commodore had chaftifed him by a gentle tap with his cane, he fell flat on the floor, as if he had been deprived of all fenfe and motion, to the terror and amazement of the ftriker; and, after having filled the whole house with confusion and difinay, opened his eyes, and laughed heartily at the fuccess of his own imposition.

It would be an endlefs, and perhaps no very agreeable tafk, to enumerate all the unlucky pranks he played upon his uncle and others, before he attained the fourth year of his age; about which time he was fent, with an attendant, to a day-fchool in the neighbourhood, that (to ufe his good mother's own expression) he might be out of harm's way. Here, however, he made little progrefs, except in mifchief, which he practifed with impunity, because the schoolmistres would run no risk of disobliging a lady of fortune, by exercifing unneceffary feverities upon her only child. Neverthelefs, Mrs. Pickle was not fo blindly partial as to be pleafed with fuch unfeafonable indulgence. Perry was taken out of the hands of this courteous teacher, and committed to the inftruction of a pedagogue, who was ordered to administer fuch correction as the boy fhould (in his opinion) deferve. This authority he did not neglect to use; his pupil was regularly flogged twice a-day; and, after having been fubjected to this courfe of difcipline for the fpace of eighteen months, declared the most obstinate, dull, and untoward genius that ever had fallen under his cultivation; inftead of being reformed, he feemed rather hardened and confirmed in his vitious inclinations, and was dead to all fenfe of fear as well as fhame. His mother was extremely mortified at these fymptoms of stupidity, which she confidered as an inheritance derived from the fpirit of his father, and confequently unfurmountable by all the efforts of human care. But the commodore rejoiced over the ruggednefs of his nature, and was particularly pleafed, when, upon inquiry, he found that Perry had beaten all the boys in the school; a circumstance from which he prognofficated every thing that was fair and fortunate in his future fate; observing that, at his age, he himself was just fuch another. The boy, who was now turned of fix, having profited fo little under the birch of his ' unsparing governor, Mrs. Pickle was counfelled to fend him to a boarding-school not far from London, which was kept by a certain perfon very eminent for his fuccefsful method of education. This advice fhe the more readily embraced, becaufe at that time fhe found herfelf pretty far gone with another child, that fhe hoped would confole her for the difappointment fhe had met with in the unpromifing talents of Perry, or at any rate divide her concern, fo as to enable her to endure the abfence of either.

CHAPTER XII.

Peregrine is fent to a boarding-fchool: becomes remarkable for his genius and ambition.

I HE commodore understanding her determination, to which her husband did not venture to make the least objection, interested himself fo much in behalf of his favourite, as to fit him out at his own charge, and accompany him in person to the place of his deftination; where he defrayed the expence of his entrance, and left him to the particular care and inspection of the usher, who having been recommended to him as a person of parts and integrity, received per advance a handsome consideration for the task he undertook.

Nothing could be better judged than this piece of liberality; the affiftant was actually a man of learning, probity, and good fenfe; and, though obliged by the fcandalous administration of fortune to act in the character of an inferior teacher, had, by his fole capacity and application, brought the fchool to that degree of reputation, which it never could have obtained from the talents of his fuperior. He had established an economy, which, though regular, was not at all fevere, by enacting a body of laws fuited to the age and comprehension of every individual; and each transgreffor was fairly tried by his peers, and punished according to the verdict of the jury. No boy was fcourged for want of apprehension, but a spirit of emulation was raifed by well-timed praife and artful comparison, and maintained by a distribution of fmall prizes, which were adjudged to those who fignalized themfelves either by their industry, fobriety, or genius. This tutor, whofe name was Jennings, began with Perry, according to his constant maxim, by examining the foil; that is, studying his temper, in order to confult the bias of his difpolition, which was ftrangely perverted by the abfurd difcipline he had undergone. He found him in a state of fullen infensibility, which the child had gradually contracted in a long courfe of stupifying correction; and at first he was not in the least actuated by that commendation which animated the reft of his school-fellows; nor was it in the power of reproach to excite his ambition, which had been buried, as it were, in the grave of difgrace; the ufher therefore had recourfe to contemptuous neglect, with which he affected to treat this stubborn spirit; forefeeing, that, if he retained any feeds of fentiment, this weather would infallibly raife them into vegetation : his judgment was justified by the event ; the boy in a little time began to make observations; he perceived the marks of distinction with which virtue was rewarded, grew ashamed of the despicable figure he himself made among his companions, who, far from courting, rather fhunned his converfation, and actually pined at his own want of importance.

Mr. Jennings faw and rejoiced at his mortification, which he fuffered to proceed as far as poffible, without endangering his health. The child loft all relifh for diverfion, lothed his food, grew penfive, folitary, and was frequently found weeping by himfelf. Thefe fymptoms plainly evinced the recovery of his feelings, to which his governor thought it now high time to make application; and therefore by little and little altered his behaviour from the indifference he had put on, to the appearance of more regard and attention. This produced a favourable change in the boy, whole eyes sparkled with fatisfaction one day, when his mafter expressed himfelf with a fhow of furprife in thefe words : " So, Perry ! I find you don't want genius, when you think proper to use it." Such encomiums kindled the fpirit of emulation in his little breaft; he exerted himfelf with furprifing alacrity, by which he foon acquitted himfelf of the imputation of dulnefs, and obtained fundry honorary filver pennies, as acknowledgments of his application : His fchool-fellows now folicited his friend/hip as eagerly as they had avoided it before; and, in lefs than a twelvemonth after his arrival, this fuppofed dunce was remarkable for the brightnefs of his parts; having in that fhort period learnt to read Englifh perfectly well, made great progrefs in writing, enabled himfelf to fpeak the French language without hefitation, and acquired fome knowledge in the rudiments of the Latin tongue. The ufher did not fail to tranfmit an account of his proficiency to the commodore, who received it with tranfport, and forthwith communicated the happy tidings to the parents.

Mr. Gamaliel Pickle, who was never fubject to violent emotions, heard them with a fort of phlegmatic fatisfaction, that fcarce manifested itself either in his countenance or expreffions; nor did the child's mother break forth into that rapture and admiration which might have been expected, when the underftood how much the talents of her first-born had exceeded the hope of her warmest imagination. Not but that the professed herfelf well pleafed with Perry's reputation; though fhe obferved that, in these commendations, the truth was always exaggerated by fchoolmafters, for their own intereft; and pretended to wonder that the ufher had not mingled more probability with his praife. Trunnion was offended at her indifference and want of faith, and believing that fhe refined too much in her difcernment, fwore that Jennings had declared the truth, and nothing but the truth; for he himfelf had prophetied from the beginning that the boy would turn out a credit to his family. But by this time Mrs. Pickle was bleffed with a daughter, whom the had brought into the world about fix months before the intelligence arrived; fo that her care and affection being otherwife engroffed, the praife of Perry was the lefs greedily devoured. The abatement of her fondnefs was an advantage to his education, which would have been retarded, and perhaps ruined, by pernicious indulgence and preposterous interposition, had her love confidered him as an only child; whereas, her concern being now diverted to another object, that fhared, at leaft, one half of her affection, he was left to the management of his preceptor, who tutored him according to his own plan, without any let or interruption. Indeed, all his fagacity and circumfpection were but barely fufficient to keep the young gentleman in order; for, now that he had won the palm of victory from his rivals in point of scholarship, his ambition dilated, and he was feized with the defire of fubjecting the whole fchool by the valour of his arm. Before he could bring his project to bear, innumerable battles were fought with various fuccefs; every day a bloody nofe and complaint were prefented against him, and his own vifage commonly bore fome livid marks of obstinate contention. At length, however, he accomplished his aim; his adversaries were fubdued, his prowefs acknowledged, and he obtained the laurel in war as well as in wit. Thus triumphant, he was intoxicated with fuccefs. His pride role in proportion to his power, and, in fpite of all the endeavours of Jennings, who practifed every method he could invent for curbing his licentious conduct, without depressing his fpirit, he contracted a large proportion of infolence, which a feries of misfortunes that happened to him in the fequel could fcarce effectually tame. Neverthelefs there was a fund of good nature and generofity in his composition, and though he established a tyranny among his comrades, the tranquillity of his reign was maintained by the love rather than by the fear of his fubjects.

In the midft of all this enjoyment of empire, he never once violated that respectful awe with which the usher had found means to infpire him; but he by no means preferved the fame regard for the principal mafter, an old illiterate German quack, who had formerly practifed corn-cutting among the quality, and fold colmetic wafhes to the ladies, together with teeth powders, hair-dyeing liquors, prolific elixirs, and tinctures to fweeten the breath. These nostrums, recommended by the art of cringing, in which he was confummate, ingratiated him fo much with people of fashion, that he was enabled to fet up school with five-and-twenty boys of the best families, whom he boarded on his own terms, and undertook to instruct in the French and Latin languages, fo as to qualify them for the colleges of Westminster and Eaton. While this plan was in its infancy, he was fo fortunate as to meet with Jennings, who, for the paltry Vol. II. E confideration of thirty pounds a-year, which his neceffities compelled him to accept, took the whole trouble of educating the children upon himfelf, contrived an excellent fyftem for that purpofe, and, by his affiduity and knowledge, executed all the particulars to the entire fatisfaction of those concerned, who, by the by, never inquired into his qualifications, but fuffered the other to enjoy the fruits of his labour and ingenuity.

Over and above a large flock of avarice, ignorance, and vanity, this fuperior had certain ridiculous peculiarities in his perfon, fuch as a haunch upon his back, and difforted limbs, that feemed to attract the fatirical notice of Peregrine, who, young as he was, took offence at his want of reverence for his uther, over whom he fometimes chofe opportunities of difplaying his authority, that the boys might not difplace their veneration. Mr. Keypftick, therefore, fuch as I have defcribed him, incurred the contempt and difpleafure of this enterprifing pupil, who now, being in the tenth year of his age, had capacity enough to give him abundance of vexation. He underwent many mortifying jokes from the invention of Pickle and his confederates; fo that he began to entertain fuspicion of Mr. Jennings, who, he could not help thinking, had been at the bottom of them all, and fpirited up principles of rebellion in the fchool, with a view of making himfelf independent. Poffeffed with this chimera, which was void of all foundation, the German defcended fo low as to tamper in private with the boys, from whom he hoped to draw fome very important difcovery ; but he was difappointed in his expectation; and this mean practice reaching the ears of his usher, he voluntarily refigned his employment. Finding intereft to obtain holy orders in a little time after, he left the kingdom, hoping to find a fettlement in fome of our American plantations.

The departure of Mr. Jennings produced a great revolution in the affairs of Keypflick, which declined from that moment, because he had neither authority to enforce obedience, nor prudence to maintain order among his steholars; fo that the school degenerated into anarchy and confusion, and he himself dwindled in the opinion of his employers, who looked upon him as superannuated, and withdrew their children from his tuition. Peregrine, feeing this diffolution of their fociety, and finding himfelf every day deprived of fome companion, began to repine at his fituation, and refolved, if poffible, to procure his releafe from the jurifdiction of the perfon whom he both detefted and defpifed. With this view he went to work, and compofed the following billet, addreffed to the commodore, which was the first specimen of his composition in the epiftolary way:

"Honoured and loving uncle,

"HOPING you are in good health, this ferves to inform you, that Mr. Jennings is gone, and Mr. Keypftick will never meet with his fellow. The fchool is already almoft broke up, and the reft daily going away; and I beg of you of all love to have me fetched away alfo, for I cannot bear to be any longer under one who is a perfect ignoramus, who fcarce knows the declination of mufa, and is more fit to be a fcarecrow than a fchoolmafter; hoping you will fend for me foon, with my love to my aunt, and my duty to my honoured parents, craving their bleffing and yours. And this is all at prefent, from honoured uncle, your well-beloved and dutiful nephew and godfon, and humble fervant to command till death,

PEREGRINE PICKLE."

Trunnion was overjoyed at the receipt of this letter, which he looked upon as one of the greatest efforts of human genius, and as fuch communicated the contents to his lady, whom he had difturbed for the purpofe in the middle of her devotion, by fending a meffage to her clofet, whither it was her cuftom very frequently to retire. She was out of humour at being interrupted, and therefore did not perufe this specimen of her nephew's understanding with all the relish that the commodore himfelf had enjoyed ; on the contrary, after fundry paralytical endeavours to fpeak (for her tongue fometimes refuled its office), fhe observed that the boy was a pert jackanapes, and deferved to be feverely chaftifed for treating his betters with fuch difrefpect. Her hufband undertook his godfon's defence, reprefenting, with great warmth, that he knew Keypstick to be a good for nothing pimping old rafcal, and that Perry flowed a great deal of fpirit and good fenfe in defiring to be taken from under his command; he therefore declared that the boy fhould not live a week longer with fuch a fhambling fon of a bitch, and fanctioned his declaration with abundance of oaths.

Mrs. Trunnion, composing her countenance into a look of religious demureness, rebuked him for his profane way of talking; and asked in a magisterial tone, if he intended never to lay aside that brutal behaviour! Irritated at this reproach, he answered in terms of indignation, that he knew how to behave himself as well as e'er a woman that wore a head, bade her mind her own affairs, and, with another repetition of oaths, gave her to understand that he would be master in his own house.

This infinuation operated upon her fpirits like friction upon a glafs globe; her face gleamed with refentment, and every pore feemed to emit particles of flame. She replied with incredible fluency of the bittereft expressions. He retorted equal rage in broken hints and incoherent imprecations. She rejoined with redoubled fury, and in conclusion he was fain to betake himself to flight, ejaculating curfes against her, and muttering fomething concerning the brandy-bottle, which, however, he took care should never reach her ears.

From his own house he went directly to visit Mrs. Pickle, to whom he imparted Peregrine's epiftle, with many encomiums upon the boy's promising parts; and finding his commendations but coldly received, defired she would permit him to take his godson under his own care.

This lady, whole family was now increased by another fon, who feemed to engrofs her care for the prefent, had not feen Perry during a course of four years, and, with regard to him, was perfectly weaned of that infirmity known by the name of maternal fondness; the therefore confented to the commodore's request with great condefcension, and a polite compliment to him on the concern he had all along manifested for the welfare of the child.

CHAPTER XIII.

The commodore takes Peregrine under his own care. The boy arrives at the garrifon; is strangely received by his own mother; enters into a confedracy with Hatchway and Pipes, and executes a couple of waggifh enterprifes upon his aunt.

TRUNNION having obtained this permiffion, that very afternoon despatched the lieutenant in a post-chaife to Keypflick's houfe, from whence, in two days, he returned with our young hero; who being now in the eleventh year of his age, had outgrown the expectation of all his family, and was remarkable for the beauty and elegance of his perfon. His godfather was transported at his arrival, as if he had been actually the iffue of his own loins. He shook him heartily by the hand, turned him round and round, furveyed him from top to bottom, bade Hatchway take notice how handfomely he was built; fqueezed his hand again, faying, " Damn ye, you dog, I fuppole you don't value fuch an old crazy fon of a bitch as me a rope's end. You have forgot how I wont to dandle you on my knee, when you was a little urchin no bigger than the Davit, and played a thousand tricks upon me, burning my bacco-pouches, and poifoning my rumbo : O, damn ye, you can grin fast enough, I see; I warrant you have learnt more things than writing and the Latin lingo." Even Tom Pipes expressed uncommon fatisfaction on this joyful occasion : and coming up to Perry, thurst forth his fore paw, and accosted him with the falutation of "What cheer, my young master? I am glad to fee thee with all my heart." These compliments being passed, his uncle halted to the door of his wife's chamber, at which he ftood hollowing, " Here's your kinfman Perry, belike you won't come and bid him welcome."-" Lord ! Mr. Trunnion, faid she, why will you continually harafs me in this manner with your impertinent intrusion ?" "I harrow you, replied the commodore ; 'Iblood, I believe your upper works are damaged; I only came to inform you that here was your coufin, whom you have not feen thefe four long years; and I'll be damn'd if there is fuch another of his age within the king's dominions, d'ye fee, either for make or mettle; he's a credit to the name, d'ye E iij fee; but damn my eyes, I'll fay no more of the matter; if you come, you may; if you won't, you may let it alone."-" Well, I won't come then (aufwered his yokefellow), for I am at prefent more agreeably employed."-" Oho! you are? I believe fo too;" cried the commodore, making wry faces, and mimicking the action of dram-drinking. Then addreffing himfelf to Hatchway, " Prithee Jack (faid he), go and try thy fkill on that ftubborn hulk; if any body can bring her about, I know you wool." The lieutenant accordingly taking his flation at the door, conveyed his perfuation in these words: "What, won't you turn out and hail little Perry? It will do your heart good to fee fuch a handfome young dog; I'm fure he is the very moral of you, and as like as if he had been fpit out of your own mouth, as the faying is; do fhow a little refpect for your kinfman, can't you ?"-To this remonstrance the replied in a mild tone of voice, " Dear Mr. Hatchway, you are always teafing one in fuch a manner; fure I am, no body can tax me with unkindness, or want of natural affection;" fo faying, the opened the door, and advancing to the hall where her nephew flood, received him very graciously, and obferved that he was the very image of her papa.

In the afternoon, he was conducted by the commodore to the houfe of his parents; and, ftrange to tell, no fooner was he prefented to his mother, than her countenance changed, flie eyed him with tokens of affliction and furprife, and, burfling into tears, exclaimed her child was dead, and this was no other than an impostor whom they had brought to defraud her forrow. Trunnion was confounded at this unaccountable paffion, which had no other foundation than caprice and whim; and Gamaliel himfelf was fo difconcerted and unfettled in his own belief, which began to waver, that he knew not how to behave towards the boy, whom his godfather immediately carried back to the garrifon, fwearing all the way that Perry thould never crofs their threshold again with his good-will. Nay, fo much was he incenfed at this unnatural and abfurd renunciation, that he refufed to carry on any further correspondence with Pickle, until he was appeafed by his folicitations and fubmiffion, and Peregrine owned as his fon and heir. But this acknowledgment was made without the privity of his wife, whole vitious averfion he was obliged, in appearance, to adopt. Thus exiled from his father's houle, the young gentleman was left entirely to the difpofal of the commodore, whole affection for him daily increased, infomuch that he could fcarce prevail upon himfelf to part with him, when his education abfolutely required that he fhould be otherwife difpofed of.

In all probability, this extraordinary attachment was, if not produced, at leaft rivetted, by that peculiar turn in Peregrine's imagination, which we have already obferved; and which, during his refidence in the caftle, appeared in fundry ftratagems he practifed upon his uncle and aunt, under the aufpices of Mr. Hatchway, who affifted him in the contrivance and execution of all his fchemes. Nor was Pipes exempted from a fhare in their undertakings; for, being a trufty fellow, not without dexterity in fome cafes, and altogether refigned to their will, they found him a ferviceable inftrument for their purpofe, and uted him accordingly. The firft fample of their art was exhibited upon Mrs.

Transion. They terrified that good lady with ftrange noifes when the retired to her devotion. Pipes was a natural genius in the composition of discords; he could imitate the found produced by the winding of a jack, the filing of a faw, and the fwinging of a malefactor hanging in chains; he could counterfeit the braying of an afs, the fcreeching of a night owl, the caterwauling of cats, the howling of a dog, the fqueaking of a pig, the crowing of a cock; and he had learned the war hoop uttered by the Indians in North America. These talents were exerted fucceffively at different times and places, to the terror of Mrs. Trunnion, the discomposure of the commodore himfelf, and the confternation of all the fervants in the caftle .-- Peregrine, with a sheet over his clothes, fometimes tumbled before his aunt in the twilight, when her organs of vision were a little impaired by the cordial fhe had fwallowed; and the boatfwain's mate taught him to fhoe cats with walnut-fhells, fo that they made a most dreadful clattering in their nocturnal excurfions. The mind of Mrs. Trunnion was not a little difsurbed by these alarms, which, in her opinion, portended E iiij the death of fome principal perfort in the family; fhe redoubled her religious exercifes, and fortified her fpirits with fresh potations; may, she began to take notice that Mr. Trunnion's conflitution was very much broke, and feemed diffatisfied when people obferved that they never faw him look better. Her frequent vifits to the closet, where all her confolation was deposited, inspired the confederates with a device which had like to have been attended with tragical confequences. They found an opportunity to infuse jalap in one of her cafe-bottles, and the took to largely of this medicine, that her conftitution had well nigh funk under the violence of its effect.) She fuffered a fuccession of fainting fits that reduced her to the brink of the grave, in fpite of all the remedies that were administered by a physician, who was called in the beginning of her diforder. After having examined the fymptoms, he declared that the patient had been poifoned with arfenic, and preferibed oily draughts and lubricating injections, to defend the coats of the flomach and inteftines from the vellicating particles of that pernicious mineral; at the fame time hinting, with a look of infinite fagacity, that it was not difficult to divine the whole myftery. He affected to deplore the poor lady, as if the was exposed to more attempts of the fame nature; thereby glancing obliquely at the innocent commodore, whom the officious fon of Æsculapius suspected as the author of this expedient, to rid his hands of a yoke-fellow for whom he was well known to have no great devotion. This impertinent and malicious infinuation made fome impreffion upon the bystanders, and furnished ample field for flander to afperfe the morals of 'Irunnion, who was reprefented through the whole diffrict as a monfter of barbarity .---Nay, the fufferer herfelf, though the behaved with great decency and prudence, could not help entertaining fome fmall diffidence of her hufband; not that fhe imagined he had any defign upon her life, but that he had been at pains to adulterate the brandy, with a view of detaching her from that favourite liquor.

On this fupposition the refolved to act with more caution for the future, without fetting on foot any inquiry about the affair; while the commodore, imputing her indifposition to fome natural cause, after the danger was past, never beftowed a thought upon the fubject; fo that the perpetrators were quit of their fear, which, however, had punifhed them fo effectually, that they never would hazard any more jokes of the fame nature.

<sup>A</sup>The fhafts of their wit were now directed againft the commander himfelf, whom they teafed and terrified almoft out of his fenfes. One day while he was at dinner, Pipes came and told him that there was a perfon below that wanted to fpeak with him immediately about an affair of the greateft importance, that would admit of no delay; upon which he ordered the ftranger to be told that he was engaged, and that he muft fend up his name and bufinefs. To this demand he received for anfwer a meffage, importing that the perfon's name was unknown to him, and his bufinefs of fuch a nature, that it could not be difclofed to any one but the commodore himfelf, whom he earneftly defired to fee without lofs of time.

Trunnion, furprifed at this importunity, got up with great reluctance in the middle of his meal, and defcending to a parlour where the ftranger was, afked him in a furly tone what he wanted with him in fuch a damn'd hurry, that he could not wait till he had made an end of his mefs? The other, not at all disconcerted at this rough addrefs, advanced clofe up to him on his tiptoes, and, with a look of confidence and conceit, laying his mouth to one fide of the commodore's head, whilpered foftly in his ear, " Sir, I am the attorney whom you wanted to converfe with in private."-" The attorney !" cried Trunnion, ftaring and half choked with choler. "Yes, Sir, at your fervice, replied this retainer to the law, and, if you pleafe, the fooner we defpatch the affair, the better; for it is an old obfervation, that delay breeds danger." " Truly, brother, faid the commodore, who could no longer contain himfelf, I do confefs that I am very much of your way of thinking, d'ye fee; and therefore you shall be despatched in a trice;" fo faying, he lifted up his walking staff, which was fomething between a crutch and a cudgel, and discharged it with such energy on the seat of the attorney's understanding, that, if there had been any thing but folid bone, the contents of his fkull must have been evacuated.

Fortified as he was by nature against all such affaults, he could not withfland the momentum of the blow, which in an inftant laid him flat on the floor, deprived of all fenfe and motion; and Trunnion hopped up flairs to dinner, applauding himfelf in ejaculations all the way for the vengeance he had taken on fuch an impudent pet tifogging mifereant.

The attorney no fooner awaked from his trance, into which he had been fo unexpectedly lulled, than he caft his eyes around in queft of evidence, by which he might be enabled the more eafly to prove the injury he had fuftained; but not a foul appearing, he made thift to get upon his legs again, and, with the blood trickling over his nofe, followed one of the fervants into the diningroom, refolved to come to an explanation with the affailant, and eich r extort money from him by way of fatisfaction, or provoke him to a fecond application before witneffes. With this view he entered the room in a peal of clamour, to the amazement of all prefent, and the terror of Mrs. Trunnion, who fhrieked at the appearance of fuch a fpectacle; and addrefling himfelf to the commodore, " I'll tell you what, Sir, faid he, if there be law in England, I'll make you fmart for this here affault : You think you have fcreened yourfelf from a profecution, by fending all your fervauts out of the way, but that circumftance will appear upon trial to be a plain proof of the malice prepenfe with which the fact was committed, efpecially when corroborated by the evidence of .this here letter, under your own hand, whereby I am defired to come to your own house to transact an affair of confequence." So faying, he produced the writing, and read the contents in these words :

Mr. ROGER RAVINE.

SIR,

BEING in a manner prifoner in my own houfe, I defire you will give me a call precifely at three o'clock in the afternoon, and infift upon feeing me yourfelf, as I have an affair of great confequence, in which your particular advice is wanted by your humble fervant,

HAWSER TRUNNION.

The cne-eyed commander, who had been fatisfied with the chaftifement he had already beftowed upon the plaintiff, hearing him read this audacious piece of forgery, which he confidered as the effect of his own villany, ftarted up from table, and feizing a huge turkey that lay in a difh before him, would have applied it, fauce and all, by way of poultice to his wound, had he not been reftrained by Hatchway, who laid fast hold on both his arms, and fixed him to his chair again, advifing the attorney to theer off with what he had got .- Far from following this falutary counfel, he redoubled his threats, and fet Trunnion at defiance, telling him he was not a man of true courage, although he had commanded a fhip of war, or elfe he would not have attacked any perfon in fuch a cowardly and clandeftine manner. This provocation would have answered his purpose effectually, had not his adverfary's indignation been represed by the fuggestions of the lieutenant, who defired his friend in a whifper to be eafy, for he would take care to have the attorney toffed in a blanket for his prefumption. This propofal, which he received with great approbation, pacified him in a moment; he wiped the fweat from his forehead, and his features relaxed into a grim fmile.

Hatchway dilappeared, and Ravine proceeded with great fluency of abufe, until he was interrupted by the arrival of Pipes, who, without any expofulation, led him out by the hand, and conducted him to the yard, where he was put into a carpet, and in a twinkling fent into the air by the ftrength and dexterity of five ftout operators, whom the lieutenant had felected from the number of domeftics for that fingular fpell of duty.

In vain did the aftonifhed vaulter beg for the love of God and paffion of Chrift, that they would take pity upon him, and put an end to his involuntary gambols; they were deaf to his prayers and proteftations, even when he fwore, in the moft folemu manner, that, if they would ceafe tormenting him, he would forget and forgive what was paft, and depart in peace to his own habitation; and continued the game till they were fatigued with the exercife.

Ravine being difmiffed in a most melancholy plight, brought an action of affault and battery against the commodore, and subpœna'd all the fervants as evidences in the caufe; but as none of them had feen what happened, he did not find his account in the profecution, though he himfelf examined all the witneffes, and, among other queftions, atked, Whether they had not feen him come in like another man? and whether they had ever feen any other man in fuch a condition as that in which he had crawled off? But this laft interrogation they were not obliged to anfwer, becaufe it had reference to the fecond difcipline he had undergone, in which they, and they only, were concerned; and no perfon is bound to give teftimony againft himfelf.

In fhort, the attorney was nonfuited, to the fatisfaction of all who knew him, and found himfelf under the neceffity of proving that he had received, in courfe of poft, the letter, which was declared in court a fcandalous forgery, in order to prevent an indictment with which he was threatened by the commodore, who little dreamed that the whole affair had been planned and executed by Peregrine and his affociates.

The next enterprife in which this triumvirate engaged, was a scheme to frighten Trunnion with an apparition, which they prepared and executed in this manner: To the hide of a large ox, Pipes fitted a leathern vizor of a most terrible appearance, stretched on the jaws of a shark, which he had brought from fea, and accommodated with a couple of broad glaffes inftead of eyes. On the infide of thefe, he placed two rufh-lights, and with a composition of fulphur and faltpetre, made a pretty large fufe, which he fixed between two rows of the teeth. This equipage being finished, he, one dark night chosen for the purpofe, put it on, and following the commodorc into a long paffage, in which he was preceded by Perry with a light in his hand, kindled his fire-work with a match, and began to bellow like a bull. The boy, as it was concerted, looking behind him, fcreamed aloud, and dropped the light, which was extinguished in the fall: When Trunnion, alarmed at his nephew's confternation, exclaimed, " Zounds ! what's the matter ?" And, turning about to fee the caufe of his difmay, beheld a hideous phantom vomiting blue flame, which aggravated the horrors of its afpect. He was inftantly feized with an agony of fear, which divefted him of his reafon; neverthelefs, he, as it were mechanically, raifed his trufty fupporter in his own defence, and the apparition advancing towards him, aimed it at this dreadful annoyance with fuch a convultive exertion of ftrength, that, had not the blow chanced to light upon one of the horns, Mr. Pipes would have had no caufe to value himfelf upon his invention. Mifapplied as it was, he did not fail to ftagger at the fhock, and, dreading another fuch falutation, clofed with the commodore, and having tripped up his heels, retreated with great expedition.

It was then that Peregrine, pretending to recollect himfelf a little, ran with all the marks of disturbance and affright, and called up the fervants to the affiftance of their mafter; whom they found in a cold fweat upon the floor, his features betokening horror and confusion. Hatchway raifed him up, and, having comforted him with a cup of Nantz, began to inquire into the caufe of his diforder; but he could not extract one word of answer from his friend, who, after a confiderable paufe, during which he feemed to be wrapped up in profound contemplation, pronounced aloud, " By the Lord! Jack, you may fay what you wool; but I'll be damn'd if it was not Davy Jones himfelf. I know him by his faucer-eyes, his three rows of teeth, his horns and tail, and the blue fmoke that came out of his noftrils. What does the blackguard hell's baby want with me? I am fure I never committed murder, except in the way of my profession, nor wronged any man whatfomever fince I first went to fea." This fame Davy Jones, according to the mythology of failors, is the fiend that prefides over all the evil fpirits of the deep, and is often feen in various fhapes, perching among the rigging on the eve of hurricanes, fhipwrecks, and other difasters, to which a fea-faring life is exposed ; warning the devoted wretch of death and woe. No wonder then that Trunnion was difturbed by a fuppofed vifit of this demon, which in his opinion, foreboded fome dreadful calamity.

CHAPTER XIV.

He is also by their advice engaged in an adventure with the excifeman, who does not find his account in his own drollery.

Howsoever prepofterous and unaccountable that paffion may be, which prompts perfons, otherwife generous and fympathifing, to afflict and perplex their fellow-creatures, certain it is, our confederates entertained fuch a large proportion of it, that, not fatisfied with the pranks they had already played, they still perfecuted the commodore without ceasing. In the course of his own hiftory, the particulars of which he delighted to recount, he had often rehearfed an adventure of deer-stealing, in which (during the unthinking impetuofity of his youth) he had been unfortunately concerned. Far from fucceeding in that achievement, he and his affociates had (it feems) been made prifoners, after an obstinate engagement with the keepers, and carried before a neighbouring justice of the peace, who used Trunnion with great indignity, and with his companions committed him to jail.

His own relations, and in particular an uncle, on whom he chiefly depended, treated him during his confinement with great rigour and inhumanity, and abfolutely refued to interpole his influence in his behalf, unlet's he would fign a writing obliging himfelf to go to fea within thirty days after his releafe, under the penalty of being proceeded againft as a felon. The alternative was, either to undergo this voluntary exile, or remain in prifon difowned and deferted by every body, and, after all, fuffer an ignominious trial, that might end in a fentence of tranfportation for life. He therefore, without much hefitation, embraced the propofal of his kinfman, and (as he obferved) was, in lefs than a month after his difcharge, turned adrift to the mercy of the wind and waves.

-- Since that period he had never maintained any correfpondence with his relations, all of whom had concurred in fending him off; nor would he ever pay the leaft regard to the humiliations and fupplications of fome among them, who had proftrated themfelves before him, on the advancement of his fortune; but he retained a moft inveterate refertment against his uncle, who was fill in being, though extremely old and infirm, and frequently mentioned his name with all the bitternefs of revenge.

Perry being perfectly well acquainted with the particulars of this ftory, which he had heard fo often repeated, propofed to Hatchway, that a perfon fhould be hired to introduce himfelf to the commodore, with a fuppolititious letter of recommendation from this detefted kinfman; an impofition that, in all likelihood, would afford abundance of diversion.

The lieutenant relifhed the feheme, and young Pickle having composed an epistle for the occasion, the exciseman of the parish, a fellow of great impudence and some humour, in whom Hatchway could confide, undertook to -transcribe and deliver it with his own hand, and also perfonate the man in whole favour it was feigned to be writ. He accordingly one morning arrived on horfeback at the garrifon, two hours at leaft before Trunnion ufed to get up, and gave Pipes, who admitted him, to understand, that he had a letter for his master, which he was ordered to deliver to none but the commodore himfelf. This meffage was no fooner communicated, than the indignant chief (who had been waked for the purpole) began to curfe the meffenger for breaking his reft, and fwore he would not budge till his ufual time of turning out. This refolution being conveyed to the stranger, he defired the carrier to go back and tell him, he had fuch joyful tidings to impart, that he was fure the commodore would think himfelf amply rewarded for his trouble, even if he had been raifed from the grave to receive them.

This affurance, flattering as it was, would not have been powerful enough to perfuade him, had it not been affifted with the exhortations of his fpoufe, which never failed to influence his conduct. He therefore crept out of bed, though not without great repugnance, and, wrapping himfelf in his morning gown, was fupported down ttairs, rubbing his eye, yawning fearfully, and grumbling all the way. As foon as he popped his head into the parlour, the fuppofed ftranger made divers awkward bows, and with a grinning afpect accofted him in thefe words : "Your most humble fervant, most noble commodore ! I hope you are in good health; you look pure and hearty; and, if it was not for that misfortune of your eye, one would not defire to fee a more pleafant countenance in a fummer's day. Sure as I am a living foul, one would take you to be on this fide of threefcore. Laud help us ! I should have known you to be a Trunnion, if I had met with you in the midft of Salifbury plain, as the faying is." The commodore, who was not at all in the humour of relifhing fuch an impertinent preamble, interrupted him in this place, faying, with a peevifh accent, " Pfhaw! pfhaw ! brother, there's no occasion to bow's out fo much unneceflary gum; if you can't bring your difcourfe to bear on the right fubject, you had much better clap a ftopper on your tongue, and bring yourself up, d'ye fee: I was told you had fomething to deliver." " Deliver ! (cried the waggish impostor) odds heart ! I have got fomething for you that will make your very entrails rejoice within your body. Here's a letter from a dear and worthy friend of yours. Take, read it, and be happy. Bleffings on his old heart ! one would think he had renewed his age, like the eagles." Trunnion's expectation being thus raifed, he called for his fpectacles, adjusted them to his eye, took the letter, and, being curious to know the fubfcription, no fooner perceived his uncle's name, than he ftarted back, his lip quivered, and he began to fhake in every limb with refentment and furprife; neverthelefs, eager to know the fubject of an epiftle from a perfon who had never before troubled him with any fort of address, he endeavoured to recollect himfelf, and perufed the contents, which were thefe :

" Loving Nephew,

" I doubt not but you will be rejoiced to hear of my welfare; and well you may, confidering what a kind uncle I have been to you in the days of your youth, and how little you deferved any fuch thing; for you was always a gracelefs young man, given to wicked courfes and bad company, whereby you would have come to a fhameful end, had it not been for my care in fending you out of mifchief's way. But this is not the caufe of my prefent writing. The bearer, Mr. Timothy Trickle, is a diftant relation of yours, being the fon of the coufin of your aunt Margery, and is not over and above well as to worldly matters. He thinks of going to London, to fee for fome poft in the excife or cuftoms, if fo be that you will recommend him to fome great man of your acquaintance, and give him a fmall matter to keep him till he is provided. I doubt not, nephew, but you will be glad to ferve him, if it was no more but for the refpect you bear to me, who am, > Loving nephew, Your affectionate uncle, And fervant to command, TOBIAH TRUNNION."

It would be a difficult tafk for the inimitable Hogarth himfelf to exhibit the ludicrous expression of the commodore's countenance, while he read this letter. It was not a ftare of aftonifhment, a convulsion of rage, or a ghaftly grin of revenge, but an affociation of all three, that took poffeffion of his features. At length he hawked up, with incredible ftraining, the interjection Ah ! that feemed to have fluck fome time in his windpipe, and thus gave vent to his indignation : " Have I come along fide of you at laft, you old ftinking curmudgeon! you lie, you loufy hulk, you lie-you did all in your power to founder me when I was a stripling ; and, as for being gracelefs, and wicked, and keeping bad company, you tell a damned lie again, you thief; there was not a more peaceable lad in the county, and I kept no bad company but your own, d'ye fee." Therefore, you Trickle, or what's your name, tell the old rafcal that fent you hither, that I fpit in his face, and call him horfe; that I tear his letter into rags, fo; and that I trample upon it as I would upon his own villanous carcafs, d'ye fee." So faying, he danced in a fort of frenzy upon the fragments of the paper, which he had fcattered about the room, to the inexpreffible fatisfaction of the triumvirate, who beheld the fcene.

The excifeman having got between him and the door, which was left open for his efcape, in cafe of neceffity, affected great confusion and turprife at his behaviour, faying, with an air of mortification, "Lord be merciful unto me! is this the way you treat your own relations, and the recommendation of your beft friend ! Surely all gratitude and virtue has left this finful world ! What Vol. II.  will coufin Tim, and Dick, and Tom, and good mother Pipkin, and her daughters, coufins Sue, and Prue, and Peg, with all the reft of our kinsfolk, fay, when they hear of this unconfcionable reception that I have met with? Confider, Sir, that ingratitude is worfe than the fin of witchcraft, as the Apoftle wifely obferves; and do not fend me away with fuch unchriftian ufage, which will lay a heavy load of guilt upon your poor miferable foul." "What, you are on a cruife for a post, brother Trickle, an't ye? (faid Trunnion, interrupting him), we fhall find a post for you in a trice, my boy. Here, Pipes, take this faucy fon of a bitch, belay him to the whipping-post in the yard. I'll teach you to rowce me in the morning with fuch impertinent meffages." Pipes, who wanted to carry the joke farther than the excileman dreamed of, laid hold of him in a twinkling, and executed the orders of his commander, notwithstanding all his nods, winking, and fignificant geftures, which the boatfwain's mate would by no means underfland : fo that he began to repent of the part he acted in this performance, which was like to end fo tragically, and flood fastened to the stake, in a very difagreeable state of fuspense, casting many a rueful look over his left fhoulder (while Pipes was absent in quest of a cat and nine tails), in expectation of being relieved by the interpolition of the lieutenant, who did not, however, appear. Tom, returning with the inftrument of correction, undreffed the delinquent in a trice, and whifpering in his ear, that he was very forry for being employed in fuch an office, but durft not for his foul difobey the orders of his commander, flourished the fcourge about his head, and, with admirable dexterity, made fuch a fmarting application to the offender's back and fhoulders, that the diftracted gauger performed fundry new cuts with his feet, and bellowed hideoufly with pain, to the infinite fatisfaction of the spectators. At length, when he was almost flea'd from his rump to the nape of his neck, Hatchway, who had purpofely abfented himfelf hitherto, appeared in the yard, and, interpoling in his behalf, prevailed upon Trunnion to call off the executioner, and ordered the malefactor to be releafed.

The excifeman, mad with the cataftrophe he had undergone, threatened to be revenged upon his employers, by making a candid confession of the whole plot; but the lieutenant giving him to understand, that, in fo doing, he would bring upon himself a profecution for fraud, forgery, and imposture, he was fain to put up with his loss, and fneaked out of the garrison, attended with a volley of curfes discharged upon him by the commodore, who was exceedingly irritated by the disturbance and disappointment he had undergone.

CHAPTER XV.

The commodore detects the machinations of the confpirators, and hires a tutor for Peregrine, whom he fettles at Winchefter fchool.

THIS was not the least affliction he fuffered from the unwearied endeavours and inexhausted invention of his tormentors, who haraffed him with fuch a variety of mischievous pranks, that he began to think all the devils in hell had confpired against his peace; and accordingly became very ferious and contemplative on the subject.

In the courfe of his meditations, when he recollected and compared the circumstances of every mortification to which he had been lately expoled, he could not help fufpecting that fome of them must have been contrived to vex him; and, as he was not ignorant of his lieutenant's disposition, nor unacquainted with the talents of Peregrine, he refolved to obferve them both for the future with the utmost care and circumspection. This refolution, aided by the incautious conduct of the conipirators, whom, by this time, fuccels had rendered heedlefs and indifcreet, was attended with the defired effect. He in a little time detected Perry in a new plot, and, by dint of a little chaftifement, and a great many threats, ex-torted from him a confession of all the contrivances in which he had been concerned. The commodore was thunderstruck at the discovery, and fo much incensed against Hatchway for the part he had acted in the whole, that he deliberated with himfelf, whether he should demand fatisfaction with fword and piftol, or difmifs him from the garrifon, and renounce all friendthip with him at once. But he had been fo long accultomed to Jack's company, that he could not live without him; and, upon more cool reflection, perceiving that what he had done was rather the effect of wantonnels than malice, which he himfelf would have laughed to fee take place upon any other perfon, he determined to devour his chagrin, and extend his forgivenels even to Pipes, whom, in the first fally of his paffion, he had looked upon in a more criminal light than that of a fimple mutineer. This determination was feconded by another, which he thought abfolutely neceffary for his own repofe, and in which his own intereft, and that of his nephew concurred.

Peregrine, who was now turned of twelve, had made fuch advances under the inftruction of Jennings, that he often difputed upon grammar, and was fometimes thought to have the better in his contefts with the parifh prieft, who, notwithftanding this acknowledged fuperiority of his antagonift, did great juffice to his genius, which he affured Mr. Trunnion would be loft for want of cultivation, if the boy was not immediately fent to profecute his ftudies at fome proper feminary of learning.

This maxim had been more than once inculcated upon the commodore by Mrs. Trunnion, who, over and above the deference fhe paid to the parfon's opinion, had a reafon of her own for withing to fee the houfe clear of Peregrine, at whole prying disposition she began to be very uneafy. Induced by thefe motives, which were joined by the folicitation of the youth himfelf, who ardently longed to fee a little more of the world, his uncle determined to fend him forthwith to Winchester, under the immediate care and infpection of a governor, to whom he allowed a very handfome appointment for that purpofe. This gentleman, whofe name was Mr. Jacob Jolter, had been fchool-fellow with the parlon of the parith, who recommended him to Mrs. Trunnion as a perfon of great worth and learning, in every respect qualified for the office of a tutor. He likewife added, by way of eulogium, that he was a man of exemplary piety, and particularly zealous for the honour of the church of which he was a member, having been many years in holy orders, though he did not then exercife any function of the priefthood.

Indeed Mr. Jolter's zeal was fo exceedingly fervent, as on fome occafions to get the better of his diferetion; for, being an high churchman, and of confequence a malcontent, his refentment was habituated into an unfurmountable prejudice against the prefent disposition of affairs, which, by confounding the nation with the ministry, fometimes led him into crroneous, not to fay abfurd calculations; otherwife a man of good morals, well verfed in mathematics and fchool divinity, fludies which had not at all contributed to fweeten and unbend the natural fournefs and feverity of his complexion.

This gentleman being deftined to the charge of fuperintending Perry's education, every thing was prepared for their departure; and Tom Pipes, in confequence of his own petition, put into livery, and appointed footman to the young fquire. But, before they fet out, the commodore paid the compliment of communicating his defign to Mr. Pickle, who approved of the plan, though he durft not venture to fee the boy; fo much was he intimidated by the remonftrances of his wife, whofe avertion to her first-born became every day more inveterate and unaccountable. This unnatural caprice feemed to be fupported by a confideration which (one would imagine) might have rather vanquished her difgust. Her second fon Gam, who was now in the fourth year of his age, had been rickety from the cradle, and as remarkably unpromifing in appearance as Perry was agreeable in his perfon. As the deformity increafed, the mother's fondnefs was augmented, and the virulence of her hate against the other fon fecmed to prevail in the fame proportion.

Far from allowing Perry to enjoy the common privileges of a child, fhe would not fuffer him to approach his father's houfe, expressed uneasiness whenever his name happened to be mentioned, fickened at his praise, and in all respects behaved like a most rancorous stepmother. Though the no longer retained that ridiculous notion of his being an imposter, she still continued to abhor him, as if the really believed him to be fuch; and when any perfon defired to know the caufe of her surprising diflike, the always loss her own, which the was not obliged to declare; nay, so much was the affected by this vitious F iii partiality, that fhe broke off all commerce with her fifterin-law and the commodore, becaufe they favoured the poor child with their countenance and protection.

Her malice, however, was fruftrated by the love and generofity of Trunnion, who, having adopted him as his own fon, equipped him accordingly, and carried him and his governor in his own coach to the place of defination, where they were fettled on a very genteel footing, and every thing regulated according to their defires.

Mrs. Trunnion behaved with great decency at the departure of her nephew, to whom, with a great many pious advices and injunctions to behave with fubmifion and reverence towards his tutor, fhe prefented a diamond ring of fmall value, and a gold medal, as tokens of her affection and efteem. As for the lieutenant, he accompanied them in the coach; and fuch was the friendship he had contracted for Perry, that, when the commodore propofed to return, after having accomplished the intent of his journey, Jack abfolutely refused to attend him, and fignified his refolution to ftay where he was.

Trunnion was the more ftartled at this declaration, as Hatchway was become fo neceffary to him in almoft all the purpofes of his life, that he forefaw he fhould not be able to exift without his company. Not a little affected with this confideration, he turned his eye rucfully upon the lieutenant, faying, in a piteous tone, "What! leave me at laft, Jack, after we have weathered fo many hard gales together? Damn my limbs! I thought you had been more of an honeft heart : I looked upon you as my foremaft, and Tom Pipes as my mizen; now he is carried away; if fo be as you go too, my ftanding rigging being decayed, d'ye fee, the firft fquall will bring me by the board. Damn ye, if in cafe I have given offence, can't you fpeak above board, and I fhall make you amends."

Jack being afhamed to own the true fituation of his thoughts, after fome hefitation, anfwered with perplexity and incoherence, "No, damme! that an't the cafe neither; to be fure you always ufed me in an officer-like manner, that I muft own, to give the devil his due, as the faying is; but for all that, this here is the cafe, I have fome thoughts of going to fchool myfelf to learn your Latin lingo; for, as the faying is, Better late mend than  never. And I am informed as how one can get more for the money here than any where elfe."

In vain did Trunnion endeavour to convince him of the folly of going to fchool at his years, by reprefenting that the boys would make game of him, and that he would become a laughing-flock to all the world; he perfifted in his refolution to ftay, and the commodore was fain to have recourfe to the mediation of Pipes and Perry, who employed their influence with Jack, and at laft prevailed upon him to return to the garrifon, after Trunnion had promifed he fhould be at liberty to vifit them once a month. This ftipulation being fettled, he and his friend took leave of the pupil, governor, and attendant, and next morning fet out for their habitation, which they reached in fafety that fame night.

Such was Hatchway's reluctance to leave Peregrine, that he is faid, for the first time in his life, to have looked mistry at parting: Certain I am, that, on the road homewards, after a long pause of filence, which the commodore never dreamed of interrupting, he exclaimed all of a fudden, " I'll be damn'd if the dog ha'n't given me fome stuff to make me love him." Indeed there was fomething congenial in the disposition of these two friends, which never failed to manifest itself in the sequel, howfoever different their education, circumstances, and connections happened to be.

CHAPTER XVI.

Peregrine diffinguishes himfelf among his fchool-fellows, expofes his tutor, and attracts the particular notice of the mafter.

THUS left to the profecution of his fludies, Peregrine was in a little time a diffinguifhed character, not only for his acutenefs of apprehenfion, but alfo for that mifchievous fertility of fancy, of which we have already given fuch pregnant examples. But, as there was a great number of fuch luminaries in this new fphere to which he belonged, his talents were not fo confpicuous, while they fhone in his fingle capacity, as they after wards appeared, F iiii when they concentred and reflected the rays of the whole conftellation.

At first he confined himself to piddling game, exercising his genius upon his own tutor, who attracted his attention, by endeavouring to feason his mind with certain political maxims, the fallacy of which he had difermment enough to perceive. Scarce a day passed in which he did not find means to render Mr. Joster the object of ridicule; his violent prejudices, ludicrous vanity, awkward folemnity, and ignorance of mankind, afforded continual food for the raillery, petulance, and fatire of his pupil, who never neglected an opportunity of laughing, and making others laugh at his expence.

Sometimes, in their parties, by mixing brandy in his wine, he decoyed this pedagogue into a debauch, during which his caution forfook him, and he exposed himfelf to the cenfure of the company. Sometimes, when the conversation turned upon intricate fubjects, he practifed upon him the Socratic method of confutation, and, under pretence of being informed, by an artful train of puzzling queftions, infenfibly betrayed him into felf-contradiction.

All the remains of authority which he had hitherto preferved over Peregrine foon vanified; fo that, for the future, no fort of ceremony fubfilted betwixt them, and all Mr. Jolter's precepts were conveyed in hints of friendly advice, which the other might either follow or neglect at his own pleafure. No wonder then that Peregrine gave a loofe to his inclinations, and, by dint of genius, and an enterprifing temper, made a figure among the younger clafs of heroes in the fchool.

Before he had been a full year at Winchefter, he had fignalized himfelf in fo many achievements in defiance to the laws and regulations of the place, that he was looked upon with admiration, and actually chofen Dux, or leader, by a large body of his cotemporaries. It was not long before his fame reached the ears of his mafter, who fent for Mr. Jolter, communicated to him the informations he had received, and defired him to check the vivacity of his charge, and redouble his vigilance in time to come, elfe he fhould be obliged to make a public example of his pupil for the benefit of the fchool.

. The governor, confcious of his own unimportance, was not a little difconcerted at this injunction, which it was not in his power to fulfil by any compultive means. He therefore went home in a very penfive mood, and, after mature deliberation, refolved to expostulate with Peregrine in the most familiar terms, and endeavour to diffuade him from practices which might affect his character as well as intereft. He accordingly frankly told him the fubject of the master's discourse, represented the difgrace he might incur by neglecting this warning, and, putting him in mind of his own fituation, hinted the confequences of the commodore's difpleafure, in cafe he fhould be brought to difapprove of his conduct. Thefe infinuations made the greater impression, as they were delivered with many expressions of friendship and concern. The young gentleman was not fo raw but that he could perceive the folidity of Mr. Jolter's advice, to which he promifed to conform, becaule his pride was interested in the affair; and he confidered his own reformation as the only means of avoiding that infamy which (even in idea) he could not bear.

His governor, finding him fo reafonable, profited by thefe moments of reflection, and, in order to prevent a relapfe, propofed that he fhould engage in fome delightful fludy, that would agreeably amule his imagination, and gradually detach him from those connections which had involved him in fo many troubles adventures. For this purpose, he, with many rapturous encomiums, recommended the mathematics, as yielding more rational and fensible pleasures to a youthful fancy than any other fubject of contemplation, and actually began to read Euclid with him that fame afternoon.

Peregrine entered upon this branch of learning with all that warmth of application which boys commonly yield on the first change of study; but he had scarce advanced beyond the Pons Afinorum when his ardour abated; the test of truth by demonstration did not elevate him to those transports of joy with which his preceptor had regaled his expectation; and before he arrived at the fortieth-and-feventh proposition, he began to yawn drearily, make abundance of wry faces, and thought himself but indifferently paid for his attention, when he started the vaft difcovery of Pythagoras, and underftood that the fquare of the hypothenufe was equal to the fquares of the other two fides of a right-angled triangle. He was afhanied, however, to fail in his undertaking, and perfevered with great induftry, until he had finifhed the firft four books, acquired plain trigonometry, with the method of algebraical calculation, and made himfelf well acquainted with the principles of furveying. But no confideration could prevail upon him to extend his inquiries farther in this fcience, and he returned with double relifh to his former avocations, like a ftream, which, being dammed, accumulates more force, and, burfting over its mounds, rufhes down with double impetuofity.

Mr. Jolter faw with aftonifhment and chagrin, but could not refift the torrent. His behaviour was now no other than a feries of licenfe and effrontery; prank fucceeded prank, and outrage followed outrage, with furprifing velocity. Complaints were every day preferred against him; in vain were admonitions bestowed by the governor in private, and menaces difcharged by the mafters in public; he difregarded the first, defpifed the latter, divested himself of all manner of restraint, and proceeded in his career to fuch a pitch of audacity, that a confultation was held upon the fubject, in which it was determined that this untoward fpirit fhould be humbled by a fevere and ignominious flogging for the very next offence he fhould commit. In the mean time, Mr. Jolter was defired to write in the mafter's name to the commodore, requefting him to remove Tom Pipes from the perfon of his nephew, the faid Pipes being a principal actor and abetter in all his malverfations; and to put a ftop to the monthly vifitations of the mutilated lieutenant, who had never once failed to use his permission, but came punctual to a day, always fraught with fome new invention. Indeed, by this time, Mr. Hatchway was as well known, and much better beloved by every boy in the fchool, than the matter who inftructed him, and always received by a number of fcholars, who ufed to attend Pcregrine when he went forth to meet his friend, and conduct him to his lodging with public teftimonies of joy and applaufc.

As for Tom Pipes, he was not fo properly the attendant of Peregrine as mafter of the revels to the whole fchool. He mingled in all their parties, and fuperintended their diversions, deciding between boy and boy, as if he acted by commission under the great seal. He regulated their motions by his whiftle, inftructed the young boys in the games of huftle-cap, leap-frog, and chuckfarthing; imparted to those of a more advanced age, the fciences of cribbage and all-fours, together with the method of ftorming the caftle, acting the comedy of Prince Arthur, and other pantomimes, as they are commonly exhibited at fea; and inftructed the feniors, who were diftinguished by the appellation of bloods, in cudgelplaying, dancing the St. Giles's hornpipe, drinking flip, and fmoking tobacco. Thefe qualifications had rendered him fo neceffary and acceptable to the fcholars, that, exclusive of Perry's concern in the affair, his difmission, in all probability, would have produced fome dangerous convultion in the community. Jolter, therefore, knowing his importance, informed his pupil of the directions he had received, and very candidly afked how he fhould demean himfelf in the execution; for he durft not write to the commodore without this previous notice, fearing that the young gentleman, as foon as he fhould get an inkling of the affair, would follow the example, and make his uncle acquainted with certain ancedotes, which it was the governor's interest to keep concealed. Peregrine was of opinion that he fhould fpare himfelf the trouble of conveying any complaints to the commodore; and if queftioned by the master, assure him he had complied with his defire; at the fame time he promifed faithfully to conduct himfelf with fuch circumfpection for the future, that the mafters flould have no temptation to revive the inquiry. But the refolution attending this extorted promife was too frail to last, and, in less than a fortnight, our young hero found himfelf entangled in an adventure, from which he was not extricated with his ufual good fortune.

CHAPTER XVII.

He is concerned in a dangerous adventure with a certain gardener; fublimes his ideas, commences gallant, and becomes acquainted with Mifs Emily Gauntlet.

HE and fome of his companions one day entered a garden in the fuburbs, and having indulged their appetites, defired to know what fatisfaction they must make for the fruit they had pulled. The gardener demanded what (in their opinion) was an exorbitant price, and they, with many opprobrious terms, refufed to pay it. The peafant being furly and untractable, infifted upon his right; neither was he deficient nor fparing in the eloquence of vulgar abufe. His guefts attempted to retreat; a fcuffle enfued, in which Peregrine loft his cap; and the gardener, being in danger, from the number of his foes, called to his wife to let loofe the dog, who inftantly flew to his mafter's affiftance, and, after having tore the leg of one, and the fhoulder of another, put the whole body of the fcholars to flight. Enraged at the indignity which had been offered them, they folicited a reinforcement of their friends, and, with Tom Pipes at their head, marched back to the field of battle. Their adverfary feeing them approach, called his apprentice, who worked at the other end of the ground, to his affiftance, armed him with a mattock, while he himfelf wielded an hoe, bolted his door on the infide, and, flanked with his man and maftiff, waited the attack without flinching. He had not remainod three minutes in this pofture of defence, when Pipes, who acted as the enemy's forlorn hope, advanced to the gate with great intrepidity, and clapping his foot to the door, which was none of the ftouteft, with the execution and defpatch of a petard, fplit it into a thousand pieces. This fudden execution had an immediate effect upon the 'prentice, who retreated with great precipitation, and efcaped at a postern. But the master placed himself like another Hercules in the breach; and when Pipes, brandifhing his cudgel, flepped forward to engage him, levelled his weapon with fuch force and dexterity at his head, that, had the fcull been made of penetrable ftuff, the iron edge must have cleft his pate in twain. Cafemated as he was, the inftrument cut fheer even to the bone, on which it ftruck with fuch amazing violence, that fparks of real fire were produced by the collifion. And let not the incredulous reader pretend to doubt the truth of this phenomenon, until he fhall have firft perufed the ingenious Peter Kolben's Natural Hiftory of the Cape of Good Hope, where the inhabitants commonly ufe to ftrike fire with the fhinbones of lions, which have been killed in that part of Africa.

Pipes, though a little difconcerted, far from being difabled by the blow, in a trice retorted the compliment with his truncheon; which, had not his antagonift expeditiously slipped his head aside, would have laid him breathlefs acrofs his own threshold; but, happily for him, he received the falutation upon his right fhoulder, which crafhed beneath the ftroke, and the hoe dropped inftantly from his tingling hand. Tom perceiving, and being unwilling to forego the advantage he had gained, darted his head into the bolom of this fon of earth, and overturned him on the plain, being himfelf that inftant affaulted by the mastiff, who fastened upon the outlide of his thigh. Feeling himfelf incommoded by this affailant in his rear, he quitted the proftrate gardener to the refentment of his affociates, who poured upon him in fhoals, and, turning about, laid hold with both his hands of this ferocious animal's throat, which he fqueezed with fuch incredible force and perfeverance, that the creature quitted his hold, his tongue lolled out of his jaws, the blood ftarted from his eyes, and he fwung a lifelefs trunk between the hands of his vanquisher.

It was well for his mafter that he did not longer exift ! for by this time he was overwhelmed by fuch a multitude of foes, that his whole body fcarce afforded points of contact to all the fifts that drummed upon it, confequently, to ufe a vulgar phrafe, his wind was almost knocked out, before Pipes had leifure to interpofe in his behalf, and perfuade his offenders to defift, by reprefenting that the wife had gone to alarm the neighbourhood, and that in all probability they would be intercepted in their return. They accordingly liftened to his remonftrances, and marched homewards in triumph, leaving the gardener in the embraces of his mother earth, from which he had not power to move when he was found by his difcoulolate helpmate and fome friends, whom the had affembled for his afliftance. Among thefe was a blackfmith and farrier, who took cognizance of his carcafs, every limb of which having examined, he declared there was no bone broke, and, taking out his fleam, blooded him plentifully as he lay. He was then conveyed to his bed, from which he was not able to ftir during a whole month. His family coming upon the parifh, a formal complaint was made to the mafter of the fchool, and Peregrine reprefented as the ringleader of those who committed this barbarous affault. An inquiry was immediately fet on foot, and the articles of impeachment being fully proved, our hero was fentenced to be feverely chaftifed in the face of the whole fchool. This was a difgrace, the thoughts of which his proud heart could not brook. He refolved to make his elopement rather than undergo the punifhment to which he was doomed; and having fignified his fentiments to his confederates, they promifed, one and all, to ftand by him, and either fcreen him from the chastifement, or share his fate.

Confiding in this friendly proteflation, he appeared unconcerned on the day that was appointed for his punifhment; and, when he was called to his deftiny, advanced towards the fcene, attended by the greateft part of the fcholars, who intimated their determination to the mafter, and propofed that Peregrine fhould be forgiven. The fuperior behaved with that dignity of demeanour which became his place, reprefented the folly and prefumption of their demand, reprehended them for their audacious proceeding, and ordered every boy to his refpective flation. They obeyed his command, and our unfortunate hero was publicly horfed, in terrorem of all whom it might concern.

This difgrace had a very fentible effect upon the mind of Peregrine, who having by this time pafied the fourteenth year of his age, began to adopt the pride and fentiments of a man. Thus difhonourably ftigmatized, he was afhamed to appear in public as ufual; he was incenfed againft his companions for their infidelity and irrefolution, and plunged into a profound reverie that lafted feveral weeks, during which he fhook off his boyifh connections, and fixed his view upon objects which he thought more worthy of his attention.

In the courfe of his gymnastic exercises, at which he was very expert, he contracted intimacies with feveral youths who were greatly his fuperiors in point of age, and who, pleafed with his afpiring genius and addrefs, introduced him into parties of gallantry which ftrongly captivated his inclination. He was by nature particularly adapted for fucceeding in adventures of this kind; over and above a most engaging perfon, that improved with his years, he poffeffed a dignified affurance, an agreeable ferocity which enhanced the conqueft of the fair who had the good fortune to enflave him, unlimited generofity, and a fund of humour which never failed to pleafe. Nor was he deficient in the more folid accomplifhments of youth : he had profited in his ftudies bcyond expectation, and befides that fenfibility of difcernment which is the foundation of tafte, and in confequence of which, he diftinguished and enjoyed the beauties of the claffics, he had already given feveral fpecimens of a very promifing poetic talent.

With this complexion and thefe qualifications, no wonder that our hero attracted the notice and affections of the young Delias in town, whofe hearts had just begun to flutter for they knew not what. Inquiries were made concerning his condition; and no fooner were his expectations known, than he was invited and carefied by all the parents, while their daughters vied with each other in treating him with particular complacency. He infpired love and emulation wherever he appeared; envy and jealous rage followed of courfe; fo that he became a very defirable, though a very dangerous acquaintance. His moderation was not equal to his fuccefs : his vanity took the lead of his paffions, diffipating his attention, which might otherwife have fixed him to one object; and he was poffeffed. with the rage of increasing the number of his conquests. With this view he frequented public walks, concerts, and affemblies, became remarkably rich and fathionable in his clothes, gave entertainments to the ladies, and was in the utmost hazard of turning out a most egregious coxcomb.

While his character thus wavered between the ridicule of fome, and the regard of others, an accident happened, which, by contracting his view to one object, detached him from thofe vain purfnits that would in time have plunged him into an abyfs of folly and contempt. Being one evening at the ball which is always given to the ladies at the time of the races, the perfon who acted as mafter of the eeremonies, knowing how foud Mr. Pickle was of every opportunity to difplay himfelf, came up and told him that there was a fine young creature at the other end of the room, who feemed to have a great inclination to dance a minuet, but wanted a partner, the gentleman who attended her being in boots.

Peregrine's vanity being aroufed at this intimation, he went up to reconnoitre the young lady, and was ftruck with admiration at her beauty. She feemed to be of his own age, was tall, and, though flender, exquifitely fhaped; her hair was auburn, and in fuch plenty, that the barbarity of drefs had not been able to prevent it from fhading both fides of her forehead, which was high and polifhed; the contour of her face was oval, her nole very little raifed in the aquiline form, that contributed to the fpirit and dignity of her aspect; her mouth was small, her lips plump, juicy, and delicious, her teeth regular and white as driven fnow, her complexion incredibly delicate and glowing with health, and her full blue eyes beamed forth vivacity and love. Her mien was at the fame time commanding and engaging, her address perfectly genteel, and her whole appearance fo captivating, that our young Adonis looked, and was overcome.

He no fooner recollected himfelf from his aftonifhment, than he advanced to her with a graceful air of refpect, and begged fhe would do him the honour to walk a minuet with him. She feemed particularly pleafed with his application, and very frankly complied with his requeft. The pair was too remarkable to efcape the particular notice of the company; Mr. Pickle was well known by almoft every body in the room; but his partner was altogether a new face, and of confequence underwent the criticifm of all the ladies in the affembly; one whifpered, " She has a good complexion, but don't you think fhe is a little awry?" a fecond pitied her for her mafculine nofe; a third obferved, that fhe was awkward for want of feeing company; a fourth diftinguifhed fomething very bold in her countenance; and, in fhort, there was not a beauty in her whole composition which the glass of envy did not pervert into a blemish.

The men, however, looked upon her with different eyes: among them her appearance produced an univerfal murmur of applaufe; they encircled the fpace on which fhe danced, and were enchanted by her graceful motion. While they launched out in the praife of her, they exprefied their difpleafure at the good fortune of her partner, whom they damned for a little finical coxcomb, that was too much engrofied by the contemplation of his own perfon, to different or deferve the favour of his fate. He did not hear, therefore could not repine at thefe invectives; but while they imagined he indulged his vanity, a much more generous paffion had taken poffeffion of his heart.

Inftead of that petulance of gaiety for which he had been diftinguished in his public appearance, he now gave manifest figns of confusion and concern; he danced with an anxiety which impeded his performance, and blushed to the eyes at every false step he made. Though this extraordinary agitation was overlooked by the men, it could not escape the observation of the ladies, who perceived it with equal surprise and resentment; and when Peregrine led this fair unknown to her feat, expressed their pique in an affected titter, which broke from every mouth at the fame instant, as if all of them had been informed by the fame fpirit.

Peregrine was nettled at this unmannerly mark of difapprobation, and, in order to increafe their chagrin, endeavoured to enter into particular conversation with their fair rival. The young lady herfelf, who neither wanted penetration, nor the confcioufness of her own accomplifhments, refented their behaviour, though the triumphed at the caufe of it, and gave her partner all the encouragement he could defire. Her mother, who was prefent, thanked him for his civility, in taking fuch notice of a ftranger, and he received a compliment of the fame nature from the young gentleman in boots, who was her own brother.

If he was charmed with her appearance, he was quite ravilhed with her difcourfe, which was fenfible, fpirited, and gay. Her frank and fprightly demeanour excit-Vol. II. G ed his own confidence and good humour; and he deferibed to her the characters of thofe females who had honoured them with fuch a fpiteful mark of diftinction, in terms fo replete with humourous fatire, that fhe feemed to liften with particular complacency of attention, and diftinguifhed every nymph thus ridiculed with fuch a fignificant glance, as overwhelmed her with chagrin and mortification. In fhort, they feemed to relifh each other's converfation, during which our young Damon acquitted himfelf with great fkill in all the duties of gallantry; he laid hold of proper opportunities to express his admiration of her charms, had recourfe to the filent rhetorick of tender looks, breathed divers infidious fighs, and attached himfelf wholly to her during the remaining part of the entertainment.

When the company broke up, he attended her to her lodgings, and took leave of her with a fqueeze of the hand, after having obtained permiffion to vifit her next morning, and been informed by the mother that her name was Mifs Emilia Gauntlet.

All night long he clofed not an eye, but amufed himfelf with plans of pleafure, which his imagination fuggefted, in confequence of this new acquaintance. He rofe with the lark, adjufted his hair into an agreeable negligence of curl, and, dreffing himfelf in a genteel gray frock, trimmed with filver binding, waited with the utmost impatience for the hour of ten, which no fooner ftruck than he hied him to the place of appointment, and, inquiring for Mifs Gauntlet, was fhown into a parlour. Here he had not waited above ten minutes, when Emilia entered in a most enchanting undrefs, with all the graces of nature playing about her perfon, and in a moment rivetted the chains of his flavery beyond the power of accident to unbind.

Her mother being ftill a-bed, and her brother gone to give orders about the chaife, in which they proposed to return that fame day to their own habitation, he enjoyed her company tete a tete a whole hour, during which he declared his love in the most passionate terms, and begged that he might be admitted into the number of those admirers whom she permitted to visit and adore her.

She affected to look upon his vows and protestations as the ordinary effects of gallantry, and very obligingly affured him, that, were fhe to live in that place, fhe fhould be glad to fee him often; but, as the fpot on which fhe refided was at a confiderable diftance, fhe could not expect he would go fo far upon fuch a trifling occafion, as to take the trouble of providing himfelf with her mamma's permiffion.

To this favourable hint he answered with all the eagerness of the most fervid passion, that he had uttered nothing but the genuine dictates of his heart; that he defired nothing so much as an opportunity of evincing the fincerity of his professions; and that, though the lived at the extremity of the kingdom, he would find means to lay himfelf at her feet, provided he could visit her with her mother's confent, which he assured her he would not fail to folicit.

She then gave him to underftand, that her habitation was about fixteen miles from Winchefter, in a village which fhe named, and where (as he could eafily collect from her difcourfe) he would be no unwelcome gueft.

In the midft of this communication they were joined by Mrs. Gauntlet, who received him with great courtefy, thanking him again for his politenefs to Emy at the ball, and anticipated his intentions, by faying that fhe fhould be very glad to fee him at her houfe, if ever his occasions thould call him that way.

CHAPTER XVIII.

He inquires into the fituation of this young lady, with whom he is enamoured; elopes from fchool; is found by the lieutenant, conveyed to Winchefter, and fends a letter with a copy of verfes to his miftrefs.

He was transported with pleafure at this invitation, which he affured her he should not neglect; and, after a little more conversation on general topics, took his leave of the charming Emilia, and her prudent mamma, who had perceived the first emotions of Mr. Pickle's passion for her daughter, and been at some pains to inquire about his family and fortune. Neither was Peregrine lefs inquifitive about the fituation and pedigree of his new miftrefs, who, he learned, was the only daughter of a field officer, who died before he had it in his power to make fuitable provision for his children; that the widow lived in a frugal, though decent manner, on her penfion, affifted by the bounty of her relations; that the fon carried arms as a volunteer in the company which his father had commanded; and that Emilia had been educated in London, at the expence of a rich uncle, who was feized with the whim of marrying at the age of fifty-five; in confequence of which, his nicce had returned to her mother, without any vifible dependence, except on her own conduct and qualifications.

This account, though it could not diminifh his affection, neverthelefs alarmed his pride; for his warm imagination had exaggerated all his own profpects; and he began to fear that his passion for Emilia might be thought to derogate from the dignity of his fituation: The ftruggle between his interest and love produced a perplexity which had an evident effect upon his behaviour ; he became penfive, folitary, and peevifh, avoided all public diversions, and grew fo remarkably negligent in his drefs, that he was fcarce diftinguishable by his own acquaintance. This contention of thoughts continued feveral weeks, at the end of which the charms of Emilia triumphed over every other confideration. Having received a fupply of money from the commodore, who acted towards him with great generofity, he ordered Pipcs to put up fome linen, and other neceffaries, in a fort of knapfack which he could conveniently carry, and, thus attended, fet out early one morning on foot for the village where his charmer lived, at which he arrived before two o'clock in the afternoon; having chosen this method of travelling, that his route might not be fo eafily discovered, as it must have been, had he hired horfes, or taken a place in the ftage coach.

The first thing he did was to fecure a convenient lodging at the inn where he dined; then he shifted himself, and, according to the direction he had received, went to the house of Mrs. Gauntlet in a transport of joyous expectation. As he approached the gate, his agitation increased, he knocked with impatience and concern, the door opened, and he had actually asked if Mrs. Gauntlet was at home, before he perceived that the portrefs was no other than his dear Emilia. She was not without emotion at the unexpected fight of her lover, who inftantly recognizing his charmer, obeyed the irrefiftible impulse of his love, and caught the fair creature in his arms. Nor did she seem offended at this forwardness of behaviour, which might have difpleafed another of a lefs open difpofition, or lefs ufed to the freedom of a fenfible education; but her natural franknefs had been encouraged and improved by the eafy and familiar intercourfe in which the had been bred; and therefore, inftead of reprimanding him with a feverity of look, fle with great good humour rallied him upon his affurance, which, the obferved, was undoubtedly the effect of his own confcious merit, and conducted him into a parlour, where he found her mother, who in very polite terms expressed her fatisfaction at feeing him within her houfe.

After tea, Mifs Emy propofed an evening walk, which they enjoyed through a variety of little copfes and lawns, watered by a most romantic stream, that quite enchanted the imagination of Peregrine.

It was late before they returned from this agreeable excurfion; and when our lover wifhed the ladies good night, Mrs. Gauntlet infifted upon his ftaying to fupper, and treated him with particular demonstrations of regard and affection. As her economy was not encumbered with an unneceflary number of domestics, her own prefence was often required in different parts of the house; fo that the young gentleman was fupplied with frequent opportunities of promoting his fuit, by all the tender oaths and in--finuations that his paffion could fuggeft. He protefted her idea had taken fuch entire possession of his heart, that, finding himfelf unable to fupport her abfence one day longer, he had quitted his studies, and left his governor by stealth, that he might visit the object of his adoration, and be bleffed in her company for a few days without interruption.

She liftened to his addreffes with fuch affability as denoted approbation and delight, and gently chid him as a thoughtlefs truant, but carefully avoided the confession of a mutual flame; becaufe fhe difcerned, in the midft of all his tendernefs, a levity of pride which the durft not venture to truft with fuch a declaration. Perhaps the was confirmed in this caution by her mother, who very wifely, in her civilities to him, maintained a fort of ceremonious diftance, which the thought not only requisite for the honour and intereft of her family, but likewife for her own exculpation, thould the ever be taxed with having encouraged or abetted him in the imprudent fallies of his youth: Yet, notwith thanding this affected referve, he was treated with fuch diftinction by both, that he was ravithed with his fituation, and became more and more enamoured every day.

While he remained under the influence of this fweet intoxication, his abfence produced great diffurbance at Winchefter. Mr. Jolter was grievoufly afflicted at his abrupt departure, which alarmed him the more, as it happened after a long fit of melancholy which he had perceived in his pupil. He communicated his apprehentions to the mafter of the fchool, who advifed him to apprife the commodore of his nephew's difappearance, and in the mean time inquire at all the inns in town, whether he had hired horfes, or any fort of carriage, for his conveyance, or was met with on the road by any perfon who could give an account of the direction in which he travelled.

This fcrutiny, though performed with great diligence and minutenels, was altogether ineffectual; they could obtain no intelligence of the runaway. Mr. Trunnion was well nigh diftracted at the news of his flight; he raved with great fury at the imprudence of Peregrine, whom, in his first transports, he damned as an ungrateful deferter; then he curfed Hatchway and Pipes, who he fwore had foundered the lad by their pernicious counfels; and, lastly, transferred his execrations upon Jolter, becaufe he had not kept a better look-out : finally, he made an apostrophe to that fon of a bitch the gout, which for the prefent difabled him from fearching for his nephew in perfon. That he might not, however, neglect any means in his power, he immediately defpatched expresses to all the fea-port towns on that coaft, that he might be prevented from leaving the kingdom; and the lieutenant, at his own defire, was fent across the country, in quest of this young fugitive.

Four days had he unfuccefsfully carried on his inquiries with great accuracy, when, refolving to return by Winchefter, where he hoped to meet with fome hints of intelligence, by which he might profit in his future fearch, he ftruck off the common road to take the behefit of a nearer cut, and finding himfelf benighted near a village, took up his lodgings at the firft inn to which his horfe directed him. Having befpoke fomething for fupper, and retired to his chamber, where he amufed himfelf with a pipe, he heard a confufed noife of ruftic jollity, which being all of a fudden interrupted, after a flort paufe his ear was faluted with the voice of Pipes, who, at the folicitation of the company, began to entertain them with a fong.

Hatchway inftantly recognized the well known found, in which indeed he could not poffibly be miftaken, as nothing in nature bore the leaft refemblance to it; he threw his pipe into the chimney, and, fnatching up one of his piftols, ran immediately to the apartment from whence the voice iffued; he no fooner entered, than diftinguifhing his old fhip-mate in a crowd of country peafants, he in a moment fprung upon him, and, clapping his piftol to his breaft, exclaimed, "Damn you, Pipes, you are a dead man, if you don't immediately produce young mafter."

This menacing application had a much greater effect upon the company than upon Tom, who looking at the lieutenant with great tranquillity, replied, "Why, fo I can, Mr. Hatchway." "What! fafe and found?" cried the other. "As a roach," anfwered Pipes, fo much to the fatisfaction of his friend Jack, that he fhook him by the hand, and defired him to proceed with his fong. This being performed, and the reckoning difcharged, the two friends adjourned to the other room, where the lieutenant was informed of the manner in which the young gentleman had made his elopement from college, as well as of the other particulars of his prefent fituation, as far as they had fallen within the fphere of the relater's comprehenfion.

While they fat thus conferring together, Peregrine, having taken leave of his miftrefs for the night, came home, and was not a little furprifed when Hatchway, entering his chamber in his fea attitude, thruft out his hand by way of falutation. His old pupil received him, as ufual, with great cordiality, and expressed his aftonishment at meeting him in that place; but when he understood the caufe and intention of his arrival, he started with concern, and, his visage glowing with indignation, told him he was old enough to be judge of his own conduct, and, when he should fee it convenient, would return of himself; but those who thought he was to be compelled to his duty would find themselves egregiously mistaken.

The lieutenant affured him, that, for his own part, he had no intention to offer him the leaft violence; but at the fame time he reprefented to him the danger of incenfing the commodore, who was already almost diftracted on account of his abfence; and, in flort, conveyed his arguments, which were equally obvious and valid, in fuch expressions of friendship and respect, that Peregrine yielded to his remonstrances, and promifed to accompany him next day to Winchester.

Hatchway, overjoyed at the fuccefs of his negotiation, went immediately to the hoftler, and befpoke a post-chaife for Mr. Pickle and his man, with whom he afterwards indulged himfelf in a double can of rumbo, and, when the night was pretty far advanced, left the lover to his repofe, or rather to the thorns of his own meditation; for he flept not one moment, being inceffantly tortured with the profpect of parting from his divine Emilia, who had now acquired the most absolute empire over his foul. One minute he proposed to depart early in the morning, without feeing this enchantrefs, in whofe bewitching prefence he durst not trust his own refolution. Then the thoughts of leaving her in fuch an abrupt and difrefpectful manner interpofed in favour of his love and honour. This war of fentiments kept him all night upon the rack, and it was time to rife before he had determined to vifit his charmer, and candidly impart the motives that induced him to leave her.

He accordingly repaired to her mother's houfe with a heavy heart, being attended to the gate by Hatchway, who did not choofe to leave him alone; and, being admitted, found Emilia just rifen, and, in his opinion, more beautiful than ever.

Alarmed at his early vifit, and the gloom that over-fpread his countenance, the ftood in filent expectation of hearing fome melancholy tidings; and it was not till after a confiderable paufe that he collected refolution enough to tell her he was come to take his leave. Though the ftrove to conceal her forrow, nature was not to be fuppreffed; every feature of her countenance faddened in a moment, and it was not without the utmost difficulty that fhe kept her lovely eyes from overflowing. He faw the fituation of her thoughts, and, in order to alleviate her concern, affured her he fhould find means to fee her again in a very few weeks; meanwhile, he communicated his reafons for departing, in which fhe readily acquiefced; and having mutually confoled each other, their transports of grief fubfided, and before Mrs. Gauntlet came down ftairs, they were in a condition to behave with great decency and refignation.

This good lady expressed her concern when the learned his refolution, faying, the hoped his occasions and inclination would permit him to favour them with his agreeable company another time.

The lieutenant, who began to be uneafy at Peregrine's ftay, knocked at the door, and being introduced by his friend, had the honour of breakfafting with the ladies; on which occafion his heart received fuch a rude fhock from the charms of Emilia, that he afterwards made a merit with his friend of having conftrained himfelf to far as to forbear commencing his profeffed rival.

At length they bade adieu to their kind entertainers, and in lefs than an hour fetting out from the inn, arrived about two o'clock in Winchefter, where Mr. Jolter was overwhelmed with joy at their appearance.

The nature of this adventure being unknown to all except thofe who could be depended upon, every body who inquired about the caufe of Peregrine's abfence, was told that he had been with a relation in the country, and the mafter condefcended to overlook his indifcretion; fo that Hatchway, feeing every thing fettled to the fatisfaction of his friend, returned to the garrifon, and gave the commodore an account of his expedition.

The old gentleman was very much ftartled when he heard there was a lady in the cafe, and very emphatically obferved, that a man had better be fucked into the gulf of Florida, than once get into the indraught of a woman; becaufe, in one cafe, he may with good pilotage bring out his vefiel fafe between the Bahamas and the Indian fhore; but in the other there is no outlet at all, and it is in vain to ftrive againft the current; fo that of courfe he muſt be embayed, and run chuck upon a lee-fhore. He refolved, therefore, to lay the ftate of the cafe before Mr. Gamaliel Pickle, and concert fuch meafures with him as fhould be thought likelieft to detach his fon from the purfuit of an idle amour, which could not fail of interfering in a dangerous manner with the plan of his education.

In the mean time, Perry's ideas were totally engrofied by his amiable miftrefs, who, whether he flept or waked, was ftill prefent in his imagination, which produced the following ftanzas in her praife.

> I. Adieu, ye ftreams that fmoothly flow, Ye vernal airs that foftly blow, Ye plains by blooming fpring array'd, Ye birds that warble through the fhade.

Unhurt from you my foul could fly, Nor drop one tear, nor heave one figh; But forc'd from Celia's charms to part, All joy deferts my drooping heart.

O! fairer than the rofy morn, When flowers the dewy fields adorn; Unfullied as the genial ray, That warms the balmy breeze of May.

Iv. Thy charms divinely bright appear, And add new fplendour to the year; Improve the day with frefh delight, And gild with joy the dreary night!

This juvenile production was enclosed in a very tender billet to Emilia, and committed to the charge of Pipes, who was ordered to fet out for Mrs. Gauntlet's habitation with a prefent of venifon, and a compliment to the ladies; and directed to take fome opportunity of delivering the letter to Mifs, without the knowledge of her mamma.

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

CHAPTER XIX.

His meffenger meets with a misfortune, to which he applies a very extraordinary expedient, that is attended with ftrange configuences.

As a stage-coach passed within two miles of the village where fhe lived, Tom bargained with the driver for a feat on the box, and accordingly departed on this meffage, though he was indifferently qualified for committions of fuch a nature : Having received particular injunctions about the letter, he refolved to make that the chief object of his care, and very fagacioufly conveyed it between his stocking and the sole of his foot, where he thought it would be perfectly fecure from all injury and accident. Here it remained until he arrived at the inn where he had formerly lodged, when, after having refreshed himself with a draught of beer, he pulled off his flocking, and found the poor billet fullied with duft, and torn in a thoufand tatters by the motion of his foot in walking the laft two miles of his journey. Thunderstruck at this phenomenon, he uttered a long and loud whew ! which was fucceeded by an exclamation of "Damn my old fhoes ! a bite by God !" then he refted his elbows on the table, and his forehead upon his two fifts, and in that attitude deliberated with himfelf upon the means of remedying this misfortune.

As he was not diftracted by a vaft number of ideas, he foon concluded, that his beft expedient would be to employ the clerk of the parifh, who he knew was a great icholar, to write another epiftle according to the directions he fhould give him; and never dreaming that the mangled original would in the leaft facilitate this fcheme, he very wifely committed it to the flames, that it might never rife up in judgment againft him.

Having taken this wife ftep, he went in queft of the fcribe, to whom he communicated his bufinefs, and promifed a full pot by way of gratification. The clerk, who was alfo fchoolmafter, proud of an opportunity to diftinguifh his talents, readily undertook the talk; and repairing with his employer to the inn, in lefs than a quarter of an hour produced a morfel of eloquence fo much to the fatisfaction of Pipes, that he fqueezed his hand by way of acknowledgment, and doubled his allowance of beer. This being difcuffed, our courier betook himfelf to the houfe of Mrs. Gauntlet, with the haunch of venifon and this fuccedaneous letter, and delivered his meflage to the mother, who received it with great refpect, and many kind inquiries about the health and welfare of his mafter, attempting to tip the meffenger a crown, which he abfolutely refufed to accept, in confequence of Mr. Pickle's repeated caution. While the old gentlewoman turned to a fervant, in order to give directions about the difpofal of the prefent, Pipes looked upon this as a favourable occafion to transact his business with Emilia, and therefore fhutting one eye, with a jirk of his thumb towards his left shoulder, and a most fignificant twift of his countenance, he beckoned the young lady into another room, as if he had been fraught with fomething of confequence, which he wanted to impart. She understood the hint, howfoever ftrangely communicated, and, by ftepping to one fide of the room, gave him an opportunity of flipping the epiftle into her hand, which he gently fqueezed at the fame time in token of regard; then throwing a fide glance at the mother, whofe back was turned, clapped his finger on the fide of his nofe, thereby recommending fecrecy and difcretion.

Emilia conveying the letter into her bofom, could not help fmiling at Tom's politenefs and dexterity; but left her mamma fhould detect him in the execution of his pantomime, fhe broke off this intercourfe of figns, by afking aloud when he propofed to fet out on his return to Winchefter. When he anfwered, "To-morrow morning," Mrs. Gauntlet recommended him to the hofpitality of her own footman, defiring him to make much of Mr. Pipes below, where he was kept to fupper, and very cordially entertained. Our young heroine, impatient to read her lover's billet, which made her heart throb with rapturous expectation, retired to her chamber as foon as polfible, with a view of perufing the contents, which were thefe :--

Divine emprefs of my foul!

If the refulgent flames of your beauty had not evaporated the particles of my transported brain, and fcorched my intellects into a cinder of ftolidity, perhaps the refplendency of my paffion might fhine illuftrious through the fable curtain of my ink, and in fublimity transcend the galaxy itfelf, though wafted on the pinions of a gray goofe quill! But ah! celeftial enchantrefs! the necromancy of thy tyrannical charms hath fettered my faculties with adamantine chains; which, unlefs thy compaffion fhall melt, I must eternally remain in the Tartarean gulf of difinal defpair. Vouchfafe, therefore, O. thou brighteft luminary of this terreftrial fphere! to warm as well as fhine; and let the genial rays of thy benevolence melt the icy emanations of thy difdain, which hath frozen up the fpirits of angelic pre-eminence! thy most egregious admirer and fuperlative flave,

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

Never was aftonifhment more perplexing than that of Emilia, when the read this curious composition, which fhe repeated verbatim three times, before the would credit the evidence of her own fenfes. She began to fear in good earnest that love had produced a diforder in her lover's understanding; but after a thoufand conjectures, by which the attempted to account for this extraordinary fustian of style, she concluded that it was the effect of mere levity, calculated to ridicule the paffion he had formerly profeffed. Irritated by this fuppolition, fhe refolved to baulk his triumph with affected indifference, and in the mean time endeavour to expel him from that place which he poffeffed within her heart : And indeed, fuch a victory over her inclinations might have been obtained without great difficulty; for the enjoyed an eafinefs of temper that could accommodate itfelf to the emergencies of her fate; and her vivacity, by amufing her imagination, preferved her from the keener fenfations of forrow. Thus determined and difpofed, the did not fend any fort of aniwer, or the least token of remembrance by Pipes, who was fuffered to depart with a general compliment from the mother, and arrived at Winchefter the next day.

Peregrine's eyes fparkled when he faw his meffenger come in, and he ftretched out his hand in full confidence of receiving fome particular mark of his Emilia's affection; but how was he confounded, when he found his hope fo cruelly difappointed ! In an inftant his countenance fell. He flood for fome time filent and abashed, then thrice repeated the interrogation of "What ! not one word from Emilia ?" And dubious of his courier's diferetion, inquired minutely into all the particulars of his reception. He afked, if he had feen the young lady; if the was in good health; if he had found an opportunity of delivering his letter, and how fhe looked, when he put it into her hand? Pipes anfwered, That he had never feen her in better health or higher fpirits; that he had managed matters fo as not only to prefent the biller unperceived, but also to ask her commands in private before he took his leave, when the told him that the letter required no reply. This laft circumftance he confidered as a manifeft mark of difrefpect, and gnawed his lips with refentment. Upon further reflection, however, he fuppofed that fhe could not conveniently write by the meffenger, and would undoubtedly favour him by the post. This confideration confoled him for the prefent, and he waited impatiently for the fruits of his hope; but after he had feen eight days elapfed without reaping the fatisfaction with which he had flattered himfelf, his temper forfook him, he raved against the whole fex, and was feized with a fit of fullen chagrin; but his pride in a little time came to his affiftance, and refcued him from the horrors of the melancholy fiend. He refolved to retort her own negleet upon his ungrateful mistrefs; his countenance gradually refumed its former ferenity; and though by this time he was pretty well cured of his foppery, he appeared again at public diversions with an air of gaiety and unconcern, that Emilia might have a chance of hearing how much, in all likelihood, he difregarded her difdain.

There are never wanting certain officious perfons, who take pleafure in promoting intelligence of this fort. His behaviour foon reached the ears of Mifs Gauntlet, and confirmed her in the opinion fhe had conceived from his letter; fo that fhe fortified herfelf in her former fentiments, and bore his indifference with great philofophy. Thus a correspondence which had commenced with all the tendernefs and fincerity of love, and every promife of duration, was interrupted in its infancy by a mifunderftanding occafioned by the fimplicity of Pipes, who never once reflected upon the confequences of his deceit.

Though their mutual paffion was by thefe means fupprefied for the prefent, it was not altogether extinguished, but glowed in feeret, though even to themfelves unknown, until an occasion, which afterwards offered, blew up the latent flame, and love refumed his empire in their breafts.

While they moved, as it were, without the iphere of each other's attraction, the commodore fearing that Perry was in danger of involving himfelf in fome pernicious engagement, refolved, by advice of Mr. Jolter and his friend the parifh prieft, to recal him from the place where he had contracted fuch imprudent connections, and fend him to the univerfity, where his education might be completed, and his fancy weaned from all puerile amufements.

This plan had been propofed to his own father, who, as hath been already obferved, ftood always neuter in every thing that concerned his eldeft fon; and as for Mrs. Pickle, fhe had never heard his name mentioned fince his departure, with any degree of temper or tranquillity, except when her hufband informed her that he was in a fair way of being ruined by this indifcreet amour. It was then fhe began to applaud her own forefight, which had difcerned the mark of reprobation in that vitious boy, and launched out in comparifon between him and Gammy, who, fhe obferved, was a child of uncommon parts and folidity, and, with the bleffing of God, would be a comfort to his parents, and an ornament to the family.

Should I affirm that this favourite, whom the commended to much, was in every refpect the reverfe of what the deferibed; that he was a boy of mean capacity, and, though remarkably difforted in his body, much more crooked in his diffortion; and that the had perfuaded her hufband to efpoufe her opinion, though it was contrary to common fenfe, as well as to his own perception : I am afraid the reader will think I reprefent a monfter that never exifted in nature, and be apt to condemn the economy of my invention; neverthelefs, there is nothing more true than every circumftance of what I have advanced; and I with the picture, fingular as it is, may not be thought to refemble more than one original.

CHAP'TER XX.

Peregrine is fummoned to attend his uncle; is more and more hated by his own mother; appeals to his father, whole condefcention is defeated by the dominion of his wife.

Bur, waving thefe reflections, let us return to Peregrine, who received a fummons to attend his uncle, and in a few days arrived with Mr. Jolter and Pipes at the garrifon, which he filled with joy and fatisfaction. The alteration which, during his abfence, had happened in his perfon, was very favourable in his appearance, which, from that of a comely boy, was converted into that of a most engaging youth. He was already taller than a middle fized man, his thape afcertained, his finews well knit, his mein greatly improved, and his whole figure as elegant and graceful as if it had been cast in the fame mould with the Apollo of Belvidere.

Such an outfide could not fail of prepoffeffing people in his favour. The commodore, notwithftanding the advantageous reports he had heard, found his expectation exceeded in the perfon of Peregrine, and fignified his approbation in the most fanguine terms. Mrs. Trunnion was ftruck with his genteel addrefs, and received him with uncommon marks of complacency and affection; he was carefied by all the people in the neighbourhood, who, while they admired his accomplifhments, could not help pitying his infatuated mother, for being deprived of that unutterable delight which any other parent would have enjoyed in the contemplation of fuch an amiable fon.

Divers efforts were made by fome well-difpofed people to conquer, if poffible, this monftrous prejudice; but their endeavours, inftead of curing, ferved only to inflame the diftemper, and fhe never could be prevailed upon to indulge him with the leaft mark of maternal regard. On the contrary, her original difguft degenerated into fuch inveteracy of hatred, that fhe left no ftone unturned to alienate the commodore's affection for this her innocent child, and even practifed the moft malicious defamation to accomplifh her purpofe. Every day did fhe abufe her hufband's ear with fome forged inftance of Peregrine's ingratitude to his uncle, well knowing that it would reach the commodore's knowledge at night.

Accordingly Mr. Pickle ufed to tell him at the club, that his hopeful favourite had ridiculed him in fuch a company, and afperfed his fpoufe upon another occafion; and thus retail the little fcandalous iffue of his own wife's invention. Luckily for Peregrine, the commodore paid no great regard to the authority of his informer, becaufe he knew from what channel his intelligence flowed; befides, the youth had a ftaunch friend in Mr. Hatchway, who never failed to vindicate him when he was thus unjustly accused; and always found argument enough to confute the affertions of his enemies. But, though Trunnion had been dubious of the young gentleman's principles, and deaf to the remonstrances of the lieutenant, Perry was provided with a bulwark ftrong enough to defend him from all fuch affaults. This was no other than his aunt, whole regard for him was perceived to increase in the fame proportion as his own mother's diminished; and indeed the augmentation of the one was, in all probability, owing to the decrease of the other; for the two ladies, with great civility, performed all the duties of good neighbourhood, and hated each other most piously in their hearts.

Mrs. Pickle having been difobliged at the fplendour of her fister's new equipage, had, ever fince that time, in the course of her visiting, endeavoured to make people merry with fatirical jokes on the poor lady's infirmities; and Mrs. Trunnion feized the very first opportunity of making reprifals, by inveighing against her unnatural behaviour to her own child; fo that Peregrine, as on the one hand he was abhorred, fo on the other was he careffed, in confequence of this contention; and I firmly believe that the most effectual method of destroying his intereft at the garrifon, would have been the flow of countenancing him at his father's house; but, whether this conjecture be reafonable or chimerical, certain it is the experiment was never tried, and therefore Mr. Peregrine ran no rifk of being difgraced. The commodore, who affumed, and justly too, the whole merit of his education, was now as proud of the youth's improvements, as if he had actually been his own offspring; and fometimes his Vol. II. H affection rofe to fuch a pitch of enthuliafin, that he verily believed him to be the iffue of his own loins. Notwithftanding this favourable predicament in which our hero ftood with his aunt and her hufband, he could not help feeling the injury he fuffered from the caprice of his mother; and though the gaiety of his difpolition hindered him from afflicting himfelf with reflections of any gloomy caft, he did not fail to forefee that, if any fudden accident fhould deprive him of the commodore, he would in all likelihood find himfelf in a very difagreeable fituation. Prompted by this confideration, he one evening accompanied his uncle to the club, and was introduced to his father, before that worthy gentleman had the leaft inkling of his arrival.

Mr. Gamaliel was never fo difconcerted as at this rencounter. His own difpolition would not fuffer him to do any thing that might create the least diffurbance, or interrupt his evening's enjoyment; fo ftrongly was he imprefied with the terror of his wife, that he durft not vield to the tranquillity of his temper; and, as I have already obferved, his inclination was perfectly neutral. Thus distracted between different motives, when Perry was prefented to him, he fat filent and abforbed, as if he did not, or would not perceive the application; and when he was urged to declare himfelf by the youth, who pathetically begged to know how he had incurred his difpleafure, he answered in a peevish strain, "Why, good now, child, what would you have me to do? your mother can't abide you."-" If my mother is fo unkind, I will not call it unnatural (faid Peregrine, the tears of indignation flarting from his eyes), as to banish me from her prefence and affection, without the least caufe affigned, I hope you will not be fo unjust as to espouse her barbarous prejudice." Before Mr. Pickle had time to reply to this expostulation, for which he was not at all prepared, the commodore interpofed, and enforced his favourite's remonstrance, by telling Mr. Gamaliel, that he was afhamed to fee any man drive in fuch a miferable manner under his wife's petticoat. " As for my own part (faid he, raifing his voice, and affuming a look of importance and command), before I would fuffer myfelf to be fteered all weathers by any woman in Chriftendom, d'ye fee, I'd raife fuch a hurricane about her ears, that"-Here he was interrupted by Mr. Hatchway, who, thrufting his head towards the door, in the attitude of one that liftens, cried, " Ahey! there's your fpoufe come to pay us a vifit." Trunnion's features that inftant adopted a new difpolition: Fear and confusion took possession of his countenance; his voice, from a tone of vociferation, funk into a whifper of "Sure you must be mistaken, Jack;" and in great perplexity he wiped off the fweat which had ftarted on his forehead at this falfe alarm. The lieutenant having thus punished him for the rodomontade he had uttered, told him with an arch fneer, that he was deceived with the found of the outward door creaking upon its hinges, which he miftook for Mrs. Trunnion's voice, and defired him to proceed with his admonitions to Mr. Pickle. It is not to be denied that this arrogance was a little unseasonable in the commodore, who was in all refpects as effectually fubdued to the dominion of his wife, as the perfon whole fubmiffion he then ventured to condemn, with this difference of difpolition-Trunnion's fubjection was like that of a bear, chequered with fits of furlinefs and rage; whereas Pickle bore the yoke like an ox, without repining. No wonder then that this indolence, this fluggifhnefs, this ftagnation of temper, rendered Gamaliel incapable of withitanding the arguments and importunity of his friends, to which he at length furrendered. He acquiesced in the justice of their obfervations, and, taking his fon by the hand, promifed to favour him for the future with his love and fatherly protection.

But this laudable refolution did not laft : Mrs. Pickle, ftill dubious of his conftancy, and jealous of his communication with the commodore, never failed to interrogate him every night about the converfation that happened at the club, and regulate her exhortations according to the intelligence fhe received. He was no fooner, therefore, fafely conveyed to bed (that academy in which all notable wives communicate their lectures), than her catechifm began; and fhe in a moment perceived fomething reluctant and equivocal in her hufband's anfwers. Aroufed at this difcovery, fhe employed her influence and fkill with fuch fuccefs, that he difclefed every circumftance of what had happened; and, after having fultained a molt fevere rebuke for his fimplicity and indifcretion, humbled himfelf fo far as to promife that he would next day annul the condefcentions he had made, and for ever renounce the ungracious object of her difguft. This undertaking was punctually performed in a letter to the commodore, which the herfelf dictated, in the words:

"SIR,

"WHEREAS my good-nature being laft night impofed upon, I was perfuaded to countenance and promife, I know not what, to that vitious youth, whole parent I have the misfortune to be; I defire you will take notice that I revoke all fuch countenance and promifes, and fhall never look upon that man as my friend, who will henceforth in fuch a caufe folicit, Sir, yours, &c. GAM. PICKLE."

CHAPTER XXI.

Trunnion is enraged at the conduct of Pickle. Peregrine refents the injustice of his mother, to whom he explains his fentiments in a letter. Is entered at the univerfity of Oxford, where he fignalizes himfelf as a youth of an enterprifing genius.

UNSPEAKABLE were the transports of rage to which Trunnion was incenfed by this abfurd renunciation: He tore the letter with his gums (teeth he had none), fpit with furious grimaces, in token of the contempt he entertained for the author, whom he not only damned as a loufy, fcabby, nafty, fcurvy, fculking, lubberly noodle, but refolved to challenge to fingle combat with fire and fword; but he was diffuaded from this violent measure, and appeafed by the intervention and advice of the lieutenant and Mr. Jolter, who represented the meffage as the effect of the poor man's infirmity, for which he was rather an object of pity than of refentment; and turned the ftream of his indignation againft the wife, whom he reviled accordingly. Nor did Peregrine himfelf bear with patience this injurious declaration, the nature of which he no fooner underftood from Hatchway, than equally thocked and exafperated, he retired to his apartment, and, in the first emotions of his ire, produced the following epistle, which was immediately conveyed to his mother.

" MADAM,

"HAD nature formed me a bugbear to the fight, and infpired me with a foul as vitious as my body was deteftable, perhaps I might have enjoyed particular marks of your affection and applaufe; feeing you have perfecuted me with fuch unnatural averfion, for no other vifible reafon than that of my differing fo widely in fhape, as well as difposition, from that deformed urchin who is the object of your tenderness and care. If those be the terms on which alone I can obtain your favour, I pray God you may never cease to hate, Madam,

Your much injured fon,

PEREGRINE PICKLE."

This letter, which nothing but his paffion and inexperience could excufe, had fuch an effect upon his mother, as may be eafily conceived. She was enraged to a degree of frenzy against the writer; though at the fame time fhe confidered the whole as the production of Mrs. Trunnion's particular pique, and represented it to her husband as an infult that he was bound in honour to refent, by breaking off all correspondence with the commodore and his family. This was a bitter pill to Gamaliel, who, through a long course of years, was fo habituated to Trunnion's company, that he could as eafily have parted with a limb, as have relinquished the club all at once. He therefore ventured to reprefent his own incapacity to follow her advice, and begged that he might at least be allowed to drop the connection gradually; protefting that he would do his endeavour to give her all manner of fatisfaction.

Meanwhile preparations were made for Peregrine's departure to the univerfity, and in a few weeks he fet out in the feventeenth year of his age, accompanied by the fame attendants who lived with him at Winchefter. His uncle laid ftrong injunctions upon him to avoid the company of immodest women, to mind his learning, to let liim hear of his welfare as often as he could fpare time to write, and fettled his appointments at the rate of five hundred a-year, including his governor's falary, which was one fifth part of the fum. The heart of our young gentleman dilated at the prospect of the figure he should make with fuch an handfome annuity, the management of which was left to his own diferetion; and he amufed his imagination with the most agreeable reveries during his journey to Oxford, which he performed in two days. Here being introduced to the head of the college, to whom he had been recommended, accommodated with genteel apartments, entered as gentleman commoner in the books, and provided with a judicious tutor, inflead of returning to the ftudy of Greek and Latin, in which he thought himfelf already fufficiently inftructed, he renewed his acquaintance with fome of his old fchoolfellows, whom he found in the fame fituation, and was by them initiated in all the fashionable diversions of the place.

It was not long before he made himfelf remarkable for his fpirit and humour, which were fo acceptable to the bucks of the university, that he was admitted as a member of their corporation, and, in a very little time, became the most confpicuous perfonage of the whole fraternity; not that he valued himfelf upon his ability in fmoking the greatest number of pipes, and drinking the largest quantity of ale; these were qualifications of too grofs a nature to captivate his refined ambition. He piqued himfelf on his talent for raillery, his genius and tafte, his perfonal accomplifhments, and his fuccefs at intrigue: Nor were his excursions confined to the small villages in the neighbourhood, which are commonly vifited once a week by the fludents for the fake of carnal recreation. He kept his own horfes, traverfed the whole county in parties of pleafure, attended all the races within fifty miles of Oxford, and made frequent jaunts to London, where he used to lie incognito during the best part of many a term.

The rules of the university were too fevere to be obferved by a youth of his vivacity; and therefore he became acquainted with the proctor by times. But all the checks he received were infufficient to moderate his career; he frequented taverns and coffeehoufes, committed midnight frolics in the ftreets, infulted all the fober and pacific clafs of his fellow-ftudents; the tutors themfelves were not facred from his ridicule; he laughed at the magiftrate, and neglected every particular of college difcipline.

In vain did they attempt to reftrain his irregularities by the imposition of fines; he was liberal to profusion, and therefore paid without reluctance. Thrice did he fcale the windows of a tradefman, with whose daughter he had an affair of gallantry, as often was he obliged to feek his fafety by a precipitate leap, and one night would, in all probability, have fallen a facrifice to an ambuscade that was laid by the father, had not his trufty fquire Pipes interposed in his behalf, and manfully rescued him from the clubs of his enemies.

In the midit of these excesses, Mr. Jolter, finding his admonitions neglected, and his influence utterly deftroyed, attempted to wean his pupil from his extravagant courfes, by engaging his attention in fome more laudable purfuit. With this view he introduced him into a club of politicians, who received him with great demonstrations of regard, accommodated themselves more than he could have expected to his jovial disposition, and while they revolved schemes for the reformation of the state, drank with such devotion to the accomplishment of their plans, that, before parting, the cares of their patriotism were quite overwhelmed.

Peregrine, though he could not approve of their doctrine, refolved to attach himfelf for fome time to their company; becaufe he perceived ample fubject for his ridicule, in the characters of thefe wrong-headed enthufiafts. It was a conftant practice with them, in their midnight confiftories, to fwallow fuch plentiful draughts of infpiration, that their myfteries commonly ended like thofe of the Bacchanalian Orgia; and they were feldom capable of maintaining that folemnity of decorum which, by the nature of their functions, most of them were obliged to profefs. Now, as Peregrine's fatirical difpolition was never more gratified than when he had an opportunity of expoling grave characters in ridiculous atti-HI iiij tudes, he laid a mischievous fnare for his new confederates, which took effect in this manner. In one of their nocturnal deliberations, he promoted fuch a spirit of good fellowship, by the agreeable fallies of his wit, which were purpofely levelled against their political adverfaries, that by ten o'clock they were all ready to join in the most extravagant propofal that could be made. They broke their glaffes in confequence of his fuggestion, drank healths out of their shoes, caps, and the bottoms of the candleflicks that flood before them, fometimes flanding with one foot on a chair, and the knee bent on the edge of the table; and, when they could no longer ftand in that posture, fetting their bare posteriors on the cold floor. They huzza'd, hallooed, danced, and fung, and, in thort, were elevated to fuch a pitch of intoxication, that when Peregrine proposed that they should burn their periwigs, the hint was immediately approved, and they executed the frolic as one man. Their fhoes and caps underwent the fame fate by the fame inftigation; and in this trim he led them forth into the ftreet, where they refolved to compel every body they fhould find to fubfcribe to their political creed, and pronounce the Shibboleth of their party. In the achievement of this enterprife, they met with more opposition than they expected; they were encountered with arguments which they could not well withstand; the nofes of some, and eyes of others, in a very little time, bore the marks of obstinate disputation. Their conductor having at length engaged the whole body in a fray with another fquadron, which was pretty much in the fame condition, he very fairly gave them the flip, and flily retreated to his apartment, forefeeing that his companious would foon be favoured with the notice of their fuperiors; nor was he deceived in his prognoftic; the proctor, going his round, chanced to fall in with this tumultuous uproar, and, interpoling his authority, found means to quiet the difturbance. He took cognizance of their names, and difmiffed the rioters to their respective chambers, not a little fcandalized at the behaviour of fome among them, whofe bufinefs and duty it was to fet far other examples to the youth under their care and direction.

About midnight, Pipes, who had orders to attend at a diftance, and keep an eye upon Jolter, brought home that unfortunate governor upon his back (Peregrine having beforehand fecured his admittance into the college), and among other bruifes he was found to have received a couple of contufions on his face, which next morning appeared in a black circle that furrounded each eye.

This was a mortifying circumstance to a man of his character and deportment, especially as he had received a meffage from the proctor, who defired to fee him forthwith. With great humility and contrition he begged the advice of his pupil, who, being uled to amufe himfelf with painting, affured Mr. Jolter, that he would cover those figns of difgrace with a flight coat of flesh-colour fo dexteroufly, that it would be almost impossible to distinguilh the artificial from the natural fkin. The rueful governor, rather than expose fuch opprobrious tokens to the observation and censure of the magistrates, submitted to the expedient. Although his counfellor had over-rated his own fkill, he was perfuaded to confide in the difguife, and actually attended the proctor, with fuch a ftaring addition to the natural ghastliness of his features, that his vifage bore a very apt refemblance to fome of those ferocious countenances that hang over the doors of certain taverns and ale-houfes, under the denomination of the Saracen's Head.

Such a remarkable alteration of phyfiognomy could not efcape the notice of the most undifcerning beholder, much lefs the penetrating eye of his fevere judge, already whetted with what he had feen over-night. He was therefore upbraided with this ridiculous and shallow artifice, and, together with the companions of his debauch, underwent fuch a cutting reprimand for the fcandalous irregularity of his conduct, that all of them remained creft-fallen, and were assumed, for many weeks, to appear in the public execution of their duty.

Peregrine was too vain of his fineffe to conceal the part he acted in this comedy, with the particulars of which he regaled his companions, and thereby entailed upon himfelf the hate and refentment of the community, whofe maxims and practices he had difclofed; for he was confidered as a fpy, who had intruded himfelf into their fopiety with a view of betraying it; or, at beft, as an apoftate and renegado from the faith and principles which he had profesed.

CHAPTER XXII.

He is infulted by his tutor, whom he lampoons; makes a confiderable progrefs in polite literature; and, in an excursion to Windfor, meets with Emilia by accident, and is very coldly received.

AMONG those who fuffered by his craft and infidelity was Mr. Jumble, his own tutor, who could not at all digeft the mortifying affront he had received, and was refolved to be revenged on the infulting author. With this view he watched the conduct of Mr. Pickle with the utmost rancour of vigilance, and let flip no opportunity of treating him with diffespect, which he knew the difpolition of his pupil could less brook than any other feverity it was in his power to exercise.

Peregrine had been feveral mornings abfent from chapel; and as Mr. Jumble never failed to queftion him in a very peremptory flyle about his non-attendance, he invented fome very plaufible excufes; but at length his ingenuity was exhaufted; he received a very galling rebuke for his profligacy of morals, and, that he might feel it the more fenfibly, was ordered, by way of exercife, to compofe a paraphrafe, in English verse, upon these two lines in Virgil:

" Vane ligur, frustraque animis elate superbis,

" Nequicquam patrias tentâsti lubricus artes."

The impofition of this invidious theme had all the defired effect upon Peregrine, who not only confidered it as a piece of unmannerly abufe levelled against his own conduct, but also as a retrospective infult on the memory of his grandfather, who (as he had been informed) was in his lifetime more noted for his cunning than candour in trade.

Exafperated at this inftance of the pedant's audacity, he had well nigh (in his firft transports) taken corporal fatisfaction on the spot; but forefeeing the troublessome confequence that would attend such a flagrant outrage against the laws of the university, he checked his indignation, and refolved to revenge the injury in a more cool and contemptuous manner. Thus determined, he fet on foot an inquiry into the particulars of Jumble's parentage and education. He learnt that the father of this infolent tutor was a bricklayer, that his mother fold pyes, and that the fon, at different periods of his youth, had amufed himself in both occupations before he converted his views to the study of learning. Fraught with this intelligence, he composed the following ballad in doggerel rhymes, and next day prefented it as a gloss upon the text which the tutor had chosen.

1.

Come, liften ye fludents of ev'ry degree, I fiag of a wit and a tutor perdie; A flatefman profound, a critic immenfe, In fhort, a mere jumble of learning and fenfe; And yet of his talents, though laudably vain, His own family arts he could never attain.

IJ.

His father intending his fortune to build, In his youth would have taught him the trowel to wield, But the mortar of difcipline never would flick, For his fkull was fecur'd by a facing of brick; And with all his endeavours of patience and pain, The fkill of his fire he could never attain.

III

His mother, an houfewife, neat, artful, and wife, Renown'd for her delicate bifcuir and pyes, ... Soon alter'd his fludies, by flatt'ing his tafle, From the raifing of walls to the rearing of pafte ! But all her inftructions were fruitlefs and vain, 'The pye-making myft'ry he ne'er could attain.

IV.

Yet true to his race, in his labours were feen A jumble of both their profeffions, I ween; For, when his own genius he ventur'd to truft, His pyes feen'd of brick, and his houfes of cruft. Then, good Mr. Tutor, pray be not fo vain, Since your family arts you could never attain.

This impudent production was the moft effectual vengeance he could have taken on his tutor, who had all the fupercilious arrogance and ridiculous pride of a low-born pedant. Inftead of overlooking this petulant piece of fatire with that temper and decency of difdain that became a perfon of his gravity and flation, he no fooner caft his eye over the performance, than the blood rufhed into his countenance, which immediately after exhibited a ghaftly pale colour. With a quivering lip he told his pupil, that he was an impertinent jackanapes, and he would take care that he fhould be expelled from the univerfity, for having prefumed to write and deliver fuch a licentious and fcurrilous libel. Peregrine anfwered with great refolution, that, when the provocation he had received fhould be known, he was perfuaded that he fhould be acquitted in the opinion of all impartial people; and that he was ready to fubmit the whole to the decifion of the mafter.

This arbitration he proposed, because he knew the mafter and Jumble were at variance; and for that reafon the tutor durft not venture to put the caufe on fuch an iffue. Nay, when this reference was mentioned, Jumble, who was naturally jealous, fufpected that Peregrine had a promife of protection before he undertook to commit fuch an outrageous infult; and this notion had fuch an effect upon him, that he refolved to devour his vexation. and wait for a more proper opportunity of gratifying his Meanwhile copies of the ballad were distributed hate. among the ftudents, who fung it under the very nofe of Mr. Jumble, to the tune of A cobler there was, &c. and - the triumph of our hero was complete. Neither was his whole time devoted to the riotous extravagancies of youth. He enjoyed many lucid intervals; during which he contracted a more intimate acquaintance with the claffics, applied himfelf to the reading of hiftory, improved his tafte for painting and mufic, in which he made fome progrefs; and above all things, cultivated the fludy of natural philosophy. It was generally after a course of close attention to fome of these arts and fciences, that his difpofition broke out into those irregularities and wild fallies of a luxuriant imagination, for which he became fo remarkable; and he was perhaps the only young man in Oxford, who, at the fame time, maintained an intimate and friendly intercourfe with the most unthinking, as well as with the most fedate students at the university.

It is not to be fuppofed that a young man of Peregrine's vanity, inexperience, and profution, could fuit his expence to his allowance, liberal as it was; for he was not one of those fortunate people who are born economists, and knew not the art of with-holding his purfe when he faw his companion in difficulty. Thus naturally generous and expensive, he fquandered away his money, and made a most fplendid appearance upon the receipt of his quarterly appointment; but long before the third month was elapfed, his finances were confumed; and, as he could not ftoop to ask an extraordinary fupply, was too proud to borrow, and too haughty to run in debt with tradefmen, he devoted those periods of poverty to the profecution of his studies, and shone forth again at the revolution of quarter-day.

In one of these irruptions, he and fome of his companions went to Windfor, in order to fee the royal apartments in the caftle, whither they repaired in the afternoon; and, as Peregrine ftood contemplating the picture of Hercules and Omphale, one of his fellow students whifpered in his ear, " Z-ds ! Pickle, there are two fine girls." He turned inftantly about, and, in one of them, recognized his almost forgotten Emilia: Her appearance acted upon his imagination like a fpark of fire that falls among gunpowder; that paffion which had lain dormant for the space of two years flashed up in a moment, and he was feized with an universal trepidation. She perceived and partook of his emotion; for their fouls, like unifons, vibrated with the fame impulfe. However, fhe called her pride and refentment to her aid, and found refolution enough to retire from fuch a dangerous fcene. Alarmed at her retreat, he recollected all his affurance. and, impelled by love, which he could no longer refift. followed her into the next room, where, in the most difconcerted manner, he accosted her with "Your humble fervant, Mifs Gauntlet;" to which falutation fhe replied, with an affectation of indifference, that did not, however, conceal her agitation, " Your fervant, Sir;" and immediately extending her finger towards the picture of Duns Scotus, which is fixed over one of the doors, afked her companion in a gigling tone, if fhe did think he looked 'like a conjurer. Peregrine, nettled into fpirits by this reception, answered for the other lady, " that it was an ealy matter to be a conjurer in those times, when the fimplicity of the age affifted his divination; but were he. or Merlin himfelf, to rife from the dead now, when fuch deceit and diffimulation prevail, they would not be able to earn their bread by the profession." "O! Sir, faid the (turning full upon him), without doubt they would adopt new maxims; 'tis no difparagement in this enlightened age for one to alter one's opinion." " No, fure, Madam (replied the youth, with fome precipitation), provided the change be for the better." " And, fhould it happen otherwife (retorted the nymph with a flirt of her fan), inconftancy will never want countenance from the practice of mankind." " True, Madam (refumed our hero, fixing his eyes upon her) examples of levity are every where to be met with." "O Lord, Sir (cried Emilia, toffing her head), you'll fcarce ever find a fop without it." By this time his companion, feeing him engaged with one of the ladies, entered into conversation with the other; and, in order to favour his friend's gallantry, conducted her into the next apartment, on pretence of entertaining her with the fight of a remarkable piece of painting.

Peregrine, laying hold on this opportunity of being alone with the object of his love, affumed a most feducing tendernefs of look, and, heaving a profound figh, afked if the had utterly difcarded him from her remembrance. Reddening at this pathetic queftion, which recalled the memory of the imagined flight he had put upon her, fhe anfwered in great confusion, " Sir, I believe I once had the pleafure of feeing you in a ball in Winchefter." " Mifs Émilia (faid he, very gravely), will you be fo candid as to tell me what mifbehaviour of mine you are pleafed to punifh, by reftricting your remembrance to that fingle occafion ?" " Mr. Pickle (the replied in the fame tone), it is neither my province nor inclination to judge your conduct; and therefore you mifapply your queftion, when you afk fuch an explanation of me." " At least (refumed our lover), give me the melancholy fatisfaction to know for what offence of mine you refufed to take the leaft notice of that letter which I had the honour to write from Winchester, by your own express permiffion." "Your letter (faid Mifs, with great vivacity), neither required, nor, in my opinion, deferved an anfwer; and, to be free with you, Mr. Pickle, it was but a shallow artifice to rid yourfelf of a correspondence you had deigned to folicit." Peregrine, confounded at this repartee, replied, that howfoever he might have failed in point of elegance or diferetion, he was fure he had not been deficient in expreffions of respect and devotion for those charms which it was his pride to adore: " As for the verfes (faid he), 'I own they were unworthy of the theme, but I flattered myfelf that they would have merited your acceptance, though not your approbation, and been confidered not fo much as the proof of my genius, as the genuine effufion of my love." " Verfes ! (cried Emilia, with an air of aftonifhment) what verfes? I really don't understand you." The young gentleman was thunderftruck at this exclamation, to which, after a long paufe, he anfwered, " I begin to fufpect, and heartily with it may appear, that we have mifunderftood each other from the beginning. Pray, Mifs Gauntlet, did you not find a copy of verfes enclosed in that unfortunate letter ?" " Truly, Sir (faid the lady), I am not fo much of a connoiffeur as to diftinguish whether that facetious production, which you merrily style an unfortunate letter, was composed in verse or profe; but, methinks, the jeft is a little too stale to be brought upon the carpet again." So faying, fhe tripped away to her companion, and left her lover in a most tumultuous suspense. He now perceived that her neglect of his addreffes, when he was at Winchefter, must have been owing to fome myftery which he could not comprehend: And the began to fufpect, and to hope, that the letter which the received was fpurious, though the could not conceive how that could poffibly happen, as it had been delivered to her by the hands of his own fervant.

However, fhe refolved to leave the tafk of unravelling the affair to him, who, fhe knew, would infallibly exert himfelf for his own as well as her fatisfaction. She was not deceived in her opinion : He went up to her again at the ftair-cafe, and, as they were unprovided with a male attendant, infifted upon fquiring the ladies to their lodgings. Emilia faw his drift, which was no other than to know where fhe lived ; and, though fhe approved of his contrivance, thought it was incumbent upon her, for the fupport of her own dignity, to decline the civility : She therefore thanked him for his polite offer, but would by no means confent to his giving himfelf fuch unneceffary trouble, efpecially as they had a very little way to walk.

He was not repulfed by this refufal, the nature of which he perfectly underftood; nor was fhe forry to fee him perfevere in his determination : He therefore accompanied them in their return, and made divers efforts to speak with Emilia in particular. But fhe had a fpice of the coquette in her difpolition, and, being determined to whet his impatience, artfully baffled all his endeavours, by keeping her companion continually engaged in the conversation, which turned upon the venerable appearance and imperial fituation of the place. Thus tantalized, he lounged with them to the door of the houfe in which they lodged, when his mistrefs, perceiving, by the countenance of her comrade, that the was on the point of defiring him to walk in, checked her intention with a frown; then turning to Mr. Pickle, dropped him a very formal curt'fey, feized the other young lady by the arm, and faying, "Come, coufin Sophy," vanished in a moment.

CHAPTER XXIII.

After fundry unfuccefsful efforts, he finds means to come to an explanation with his miltrefs; and a reconciliation enfues.

PEREGRINE, difconcerted at their fudden difappearance, ftood for fome minutes gaping in the ftreet, before he could get the better of his furprife: and then deliberated with himfelf whether he fhould demand immediate admittance to his miltrefs, or choofe fome other method of application. Piqued at her abrupt behaviour, though pleafed with her fpirit, he fet his invention to work, in order to contrive some means of seeing her; and, in a fit of musing, arrived at the inn, where he found his companions whom he had left at the Caftle gate. They had already made inquiry about the ladies, in confequence of which he lear: t, that Mifs Sophy was daughter of a gentleman in town, to whom his miftrefs was related; that an intimate friendship subsisted between the two young ladies; that Emilia had lived about a month with her coufin, and appeared at the laft affembly, where fhe was univerfally admired; and that feveral young gentlemen of fortune had fince that time teafed her with addreffes. Our hero's ambition was flattered, and his paffion inflamed with this intelligence; and he fwore within himfelf, that he would not quit the fpot until he fhould have obtained an indifputed victory over all his rivals.

That fame evening he composed a most eloquent epiftle, in which he earnestly entreated that she would favour him with an opportunity of vindicating his conduct; but she would neither receive his billet, nor see his message. Baulked in this effort, he enclosed it in a new cover, directed by another hand, and ordered Pipes to ride next morning to London, on purpose to deliver it at the postoffice, that, coming by such conveyance, she might have no sufficient of the author, and open it before the should be aware of the deceit.

Three days he waited patiently for the effect of this ftratagem, and, in the afternoon of the fourth, ventured to hazard a formal vifit, in quality of an old acquaintance. But here too he failed in his attempt; The was indifpofed, and could not fee company. Thefe obftacles ferved only to increafe his eagernets: He ftill adhered to his former refolution; and his companions, underftanding his determination, left him next day to his own inventions. Thus relinquifhed to his own ideas, he doubled his affiduity, and practifed every method his imagination could fuggeft, in order to promote his plan.

Pipes was stationed all day long within fight of her door, that he might be able to give his matter an account of her motions: But the never went abroad, except to visit in the neighbourhood, and was always houfed before Peregrine could be apprifed of her appearance. He went to church with a view of attracting her notice, and humbled his deportment before her: But fhe was fo mifchievoufly devout as to look at nothing but her book, fo that he was not favoured with one glance of regard. He frequented the coffeehouse, and attempted to contract an acquaintance with Mifs Sophy's father, who, he hoped, would invite him to his house : But this expectation was also defeated .- That prudent gentleman looked upon him as one of those forward fortune-hunters who go about the country feeking whom they may devour, and warily difcouraged all his advances. Chagrined by fo many unfuccessful endeavours, he began to despair of ac-Vol. II.

complifhing his aim; and, as the laft fuggeftion of his art, paid off his lodging, took horfe at noon, and departed, in all appearance, for the place from whence he had come. He rode, however, but a few miles, and, in the dufk of the evening, returned unfeen, alighted at another inn, ordered Pipes to ftay within doors, and, keeping himfelf incognito, employed another perfon as a centinel upon Emilia.

It was not long before he reaped the fruits of his ingenuity. Next day in the afternoon he was informed by his fpy, that the two young ladies were gone to walk in the park, whither he followed them on the inftant, fully determined to come to an explanation with his miftrefs, even in prefence of her friend, who might poffibly be prevailed upon to intereft herfelf in his behalf.

When he faw them at fuch a diftance that they could not return to town before he fhould have an opportunity of putting his refolution in practice, he mended his pace, and found means to appear before them fo fuddenly, that Emilia could not help expreffing her furprife in a fcream. Our lover, putting on a mien of humility and mortification, begged to know if her refentment was implacable; and afked, why the had to cruelly refuted to grant him the common privilege that every criminal enjoyed? "Dear Mifs Sophy (faid he, addreffing himfelf to her companion), give me leave to implore your interceffion with your coufin; I am fure you have humanity enough to efpouse my cause, did you but know the justice of it; and I flatter myself, that, by your kind interpolition, I may be able to rectify that fatal mifunderstanding which hath made me wretched." " Sir (faid Sophy), you appear like a gentleman, and I doubt not but your behaviour has been always fuitable to your appearance; but you must excuse me from undertaking any fuch office in behalf of a perfon whom I have not the honour to know." " Madam (anfwered Peregrine), I hope Mifs Emy will juftify my pretentions to that character, notwithstanding the mystery of her difpleafure, which, upon my honour, I cannot for my foul explain." " Lord ! Mr. Pickle (faid Emilia, who had by this time recollected herfelf), I never queftioned your gallantry and tafte, but I am refolved that you never shall have caufe to exercife your talents at my expence; fo that you teafe yourfelf and me to no purpofe : Come, Sophy, let us walk home again." "Good God! Madam (cried the lover, with great emotion), why will you diffract me with fuch indifference? Stay, dear Emilia ! I conjure you on my knees to ftay and hear me : By all that is facred ! I was not to blame; you muft have been impofed upon by fome villain who envied my good fortune, and took fome treacherous method to ruin my love."

Mifs Sophy, who poffeffed a large flock of good nature, and to whom her coufin had communicated the caufe of her reforve, feeing the young gentleman fo much affected with that difdain, which fhe knew to be feigned. laid hold on Emilia's fleeve, faying, with a fmile, " Not quite fo fast, Emily, I begin to perceive that this is a love-quarrel, and therefore there may be hopes of a reconciliation; for I fuppofe both parties are open to conviction." " For my own part (cried Peregrine, with great eagerness), I appeal to Mils Sophy's decision. But why do I fay appeal? Though I am confcious of having committed no offence, I am ready to fubmit to any penance, let it be ever fo rigorous, that my fair enflaver herfelf shall impose, provided it will entitle me to her favour and forgivenefs at last." Emily, well nigh overcome by this declaration, told him, that, as fhe taxed him with no guilt, fhe expected no atonement; and preffed her companion to return into town. But Sophy, who was too indulgent to her friend's real inclination to comply with her requeft, obferved, that the gentleman feemed fo reafonable in his conceffions, fhe began to think her coufin was in the wrong, and felt herfelf difpofed to act as umpire in the difpute.

Overjoyed at this condefcention, Mr. Pickle thanked her in the most rapturous terms, and, in the transport of his expectation, kiffed the hand of his kind mediatrix; a circumstance which had a remarkable effect on the countenance of Emilia, who did not feem to relish the warmth of his acknowledgment.

After many fupplications on one hand, and preffing remonstrances on the other, the yielded at length, and, turning to her lover, while her face was overspread with blushes, "Well, Sir (faid she), supposing I were to put the difference on that iffue, how could you excuse the ridiculous letter which you fent to me from Winchefter ?" This expoftulation introduced a difcuffion of the whole affair, in which all the circumftances were cauvaffed; and Emilia ftill affirmed, with great heat, that the letter muft have been calculated to affront her; for fhe could not fuppofe the author was fo weak as to defign it for any other purpofe.

Peregrine, who ftill retained in his memory the fubftance of this unlucky epiftle, as well as the verfes which were encloted, could recollect no particular expression which could have justly given the least umbrage; and therefore, in the agonies of perplexity, begged that the whole might be submitted to the judgment of Miss Sophy, and faithfully promifed to stand to her award.

In fhort, this propofal was, with feeming reluctance, embraced by Emilia, and an, appointment made to meet next day, in the fame place, whether both parties were defired to come, provided with their credentials, according to which definitive fentence would be pronounced.

Our lover having fucceeded thus far, overwhelmed Sophy with acknowledgments on account of her generous mediation, and, in the courfe of their walk, which Emilia was now in no hurry to conclude, whifpered a great many tender proteftations in the ear of his miftrefs, who neverthelefs continued to act upon the referve until her doubts fhould be more fully refolved.

Mr. Pickle having found means to amufe them in the fields till the twilight, was obliged to wifh them good even, after having obtained a folemn repetition of their promife to meet him at the appointed time and place; and then retreated to his apartment, where he fpent the whole night in various conjectures on the fubject of this letter, the Gordian knot of which he could by no means untie.

One while he imagined that fome wag had played a trick upon his meffenger, in confequence of which Emilia had received a fuppofititious letter; but, upon further reflection, he could not conceive the practicability of any fuch deceit. Then he began to doubt the fincerity of his miftrefs, who perhaps had only made that an handle for difcarding him, at the requeft of fome favoured rival; but his own integrity forbade him to harbour this mean fufpicion; and therefore he was again involved in the labyrinth of perplexity. Next day he waited on the rack of impatience for the hour of five in the afternoon, which no fooner ftruck, than he ordered Pipes to attend him, in cafe there fhould be occafion for his evidence, and repaired to the place of rendezvous, where he had not tarried five minutes before the ladies appeared. Mutual compliments being paffed, and the attendant stationed at a convenient diftance, Peregrine perfuaded them to fit down upon the grafs, under the shade of a spreading oak, that they might be more at their ease; while he stretched himself at their feet, and defired that the paper on which his doom depended might be examined. It was accordingly put into the hands of his fair arbitrefs, who read it immediately with an audible voice. The first two words of it were no fooner pronounced, than he ftarted with great emotion, and raifed himfelf on his hand and knee, in which posture he liftened to the rest of the sentence; then fprung upon his feet in the utmost astonishment, and, glowing with refentment at the fame time, exclaimed, " Hell and the devil ! what's all that ? Sure you make a jeft of me, Madam." " Pray, Sir (faid Sophy), give me the hearing for a few moments, and then urge what you shall think proper in your own defence." Having thus cautioned him, fhe proceeded : But, before fhe had finifhed one half of the performance, her gravity forfook her, and the was feized with a violent fit of laughter, in which neither of the lovers could help joining, notwithftanding the refentment which at that inftant prevailed in the breafts of both. The judge, however, in a little time, refumed her folemnity, and having read the remaining part of this curious epiftle, all three continued flaring at each other alternately for the fpace of half a minute, and then broke forth at the fame inftant into another paroxyfm of mirth. From this unanimous convulfion, one would have thought that both parties were extremely well pleafed with the joke; yet this was by no means the cafe.

Emilia imagined, that, notwithftanding his affected furprife, her lover, in fpite of himfelf, had renewed the laugh at her expence, and, in fo doing, applauded his own unmannerly ridicule. This fuppofition could not fail of raifing and reviving her indignation, while Peregrine highly refented the indignity with which he fuppofed himfelf treated, in her attempting to make him the dupe of fuch a grofs and ludicrous artifice. This being the fituation of their thoughts, their mirth was fucceeded by a mutual gloominefs of afpect; and the judge, addreffing herfelf to Mr. Pickle, afked if he had any thing to offer why fentence fhould not be pronounced? " Madam (anfwered the culprit), I am forry to find myfelf fo low in the opinion of your coufin, as to be thought capable of being deceived by fuch a fhallow contrivance." " Nay, Sir (faid Emilia), the contrivance is your own; and I cannot help admiring your confidence in imputing it to me." " Upon my honour, Mils Emily (refumed our hero), you wrong my understanding as well as my love, in acculing me of having written fuch a filly impertinent performance, the very appearance and addrefs of it is fo unlike the letter which I did myfelf the honour to write, that I dare fay my man, even at this diftance of time, will remember the difference." So faying, he extended his voice, and beckoned to Pipes, who immediately drew near. His miftrefs feemed to object to the evidence, by obferving that, to be fure, Mr. Pipes had his cue; when Peregrine, begging the would fpare him the mortification of confidering him in fuch a difhonourable light, defired his valet to examine the outfide of the letter, and recollect if it was the fame which he had delivered to Mifs Gauntlet about two years ago. Pipes having taken a fuperficial view of it, pulled up his breeches, faying, " Mayhap it is, but we have made fo many trips, and been in fo many creeks and corners fince that time, that I can't pretend to be certain; for I neither keep journal nor logbook of our proceedings." Emitia commended him for his candour, at the fame time darting a farcaftic look at his mafter, as if the thought he had tampered with his fervant's integrity in vain; and Peregrine began to rave and to curfe his fate for having fubjected him to fuch mean fuspicion, attefting heaven and earth in the most earnest manner, that, far from having composed and conveyed that flupid production, he had never feen it before, nor been privy to the leaft circumstance of the plan.

Pipes, now for the first time, perceived the mischief which he had occasioned, and, moved with the transports of his master, for whom he had a most inviolable attachment, frankly declared he was ready to make oath that Mr. Pickle had no hand in the letter which he delivered. All three were amazed at this confession, the meaning of which they could not comprehend. Peregrine, after fome paufe, leaped upon Pipes, and feizing him by the throat, exclaimed in an ecftafy of rage, "Rafcal! tell me this inftant what became of the letter I intrufted to your care." The patient valet, half ftrangled as he was, fquirted a collection of tobacco juice out of one corner of his mouth, and with great deliberation replied, "Why,-burnt it; you wouldn't have me give the young woman a thing that flook all in the wind in tatters, would you?" The ladies interpofed in behalf of the diftreffed fquire, from whom, by dint of questions, which he had neither art nor inclination to evade, they extorted an explanation of the whole affair.

Such ridiculous fimplicity and innocence of intention appeared in the composition of his expedient, that even the remembrance of all the chagrin which it had produced could not rouse their indignation, or enable them to refist a third eruption of laughter, which they forthwith underwent.

Pipes was difmified with many menacing injunctions to beware of fuch conduct for the future; Emilia flood with a confusion of joy and tenderness in her countenance; Peregrine's eyes kindled into rapture, and when Miss Sophy pronounced the fentence of reconciliation, advanced to his mistress, faying, "Truth is mighty, and will prevail;" then classing her in his arms, very impudently ravished a kiss, which the had not power to refuse. Nay, fuch was the impulse of his joy, that he took the fame freedom with the lips of Sophy, calling her his kind mediatrix and guardian angel, and behaved with fuch extravagance of transport as plainly evinced the fervour and funcerity of his love.

I fhall not pretend to repeat the tender proteftations that were uttered on one fide, or defcribe the bewitching glances of approbation with which they were received on the other; fuffice it to fay, that the endearing intimacy of their former connection was inftantly renewed, and Sophy, who congratulated them upon the happy termi-Iviiij nation of their quarrel, favoured with their mutual confidence. In confequence of this happy pacification, they deliberated upon the means of feeing each other often; and as he could not, without fome previous introduction, vifit her openly at the houfe of her relation, they agreed to meet every afternoon in the park till the next affembly, at which he would folicit her as a partner, and fhe be unengaged, in expectation of his requeft. By this connection he would be entitled to vifit her next day, and thus an avowed correspondence would of courfe commence. This plan was actually put in execution, and attended with a circumftance which had well nigh produced fome mifchievous confequence, had not Peregrine's good fortune been fuperior to his diferction.

CHAPTER XXIV.

He achieves an adventure at the affembly, and quarrels with his governor.

At the affembly were no fewer than three gentlemen of fortune, who rivalled our lover in his paffion for Emilia, and who had feverally begged the honour of dancing with her upon that occafion. She had excufed herfelf to each, on pretence of a flight indifposition that the forefaw would detain her from the ball, and defired they would provide themselves with other partners. Obliged to admit her excufe, they accordingly followed her advice; and after they had engaged themselves beyond the power of retracting, had the mortification to fee her there unclaimed.

They in their turn made up to her, and expressed their furprife and concern at finding her in the assembly unprovided, after she had declined their invitation; but she told them that her cold had forsfaken her since she had the pleasure of seeing them, and that she would rely upon accident for a partner. Just as she pronounced these words to the last of the three, Peregrine advanced as an utter stranger, bowed with great respect, told her he understood she was unengaged, and would think himself highly honoured in being accepted as her partner for the night; and he had the good fortune to fucceed in his application.

As they were by far the handfomeft and beft accomplished couple in the room, they could not fail of attracting the notice and admiration of the fpectators, which inflamed the jealoufy of his three competitors, who immediately entered into a confpiracy against this gaudy ftranger, whom, as their rival, they refolved to affront in public. Purfuant to the plan which they projected for this purpofe, the first country dance was no fooner concluded, than one of them, with his partner, took place of Peregrine and his miftrefs, contrary to the regulation of the ball. Our lover, imputing his behaviour to inadvertency, informed the gentleman of his miftake, and civilly defired he would rectify his error. The other told him, in an imperious tone, that he wanted none of his advice, and bade him mind his own affairs. Peregrine anfwered with fome warmth, and infifted upon his fight; a difpute commenced, high words enfued, in the courfe of which our impetuous youth, hearing himfelf reviled with the appellation of fcoundrel, pulled off his antagonist's periwig, and flung it 'in his face. The ladies immediately fhrieked, the gentlemen interpofed, Emilia was feized with a fit of trembling, and conducted to her feat by her youthful admirer, who begged pardon for having difcomposed her, and vindicated what he had done, by reprefenting the neceffity he was under to refent the provocation he had received.

Though the could not help owning the juftice of his plea, the was not the lefs concerned at the dangerous fituation in which he had involved himfelf, and, in the utmost confternation and anxiety, infifted upon going directly home. He could not refift her importunities; and her coufin being determined to accompany her, he efcorted them to their lodgings, where he withed them good night, after having, in order to quiet their apprehentions, protefted, that, if his opponent was fatisfied, he fhould never take any ftep towards the profecution of the quarrel. Meanwhile the affembly-room became a fcene of tumult and uproar. The perfon who conceived himfelf injured, feeing Peregrine retire, flruggled with his companions, in order to purfue and take fatisfaction of our hero, whom he loaded with terms of abufe, and challenged to fingle combat.

The director of the ball held a confultation with all the fubfcribers who were prefent; and it was determined, by a majority of votes, that the two gentlemen who had occafioned the difturbance fhould be defired to withdraw. This refolution being fignified to one of the parties then prefent, he made fome difficulty of complying, but was perfuaded to fubmit by his two confederates, who accompanied him to the ftreet-door, where he was met by Peregrine on his return to the affembly.

This choleric gentleman, who was a country 'fquire, no fooner faw his rival, than he began to brandish his cudgel in a menacing pofture, when our adventurous youth ftepping back with one foot, laid his hand upon the hilt of his fword, which he drew half way out of the fcabbard. This attitude, and the fight of the blade, which gliftened' by moon-light in his face, checked, in fome fort, the ardour of his affailant, who defired he would lay afide his toafter, and take a bout with him at equal arms. Peregrine, who was an expert cudgel-player, accepted the invitation; then exchanging weapons with Pipes, who ftood behind him, put himfelf in a pofture of defence, and received the attack of his adverfary, who ftruck at random, without either skill or economy. Pickle could have beaten the cudgel out of his hand at the first blow; but as, in that cafe, he would have been obliged in honour to give immediate quarter, he refolved to difcipline his antagonist without endeavouring to difable him, until he fhould be heartily fatisfied with the vengeance he had taken. With this view he returned the falute, and raifed fuch a clatter about the fquire's pate, that one who had heard, without feeing the application, would have miftaken the found for that of a falt-box, in the hand of a dexterous Merry Andrew, belonging to one of the booths at Bartholomew fair. Neither was this falutation confined to his head; his fhoulders, arms, thighs, ancles, and ribs, were vifited with amazing rapidity, while Tom Pipes founded the charge through his fift. Peregrine, tired with this exercife, which had almost bereft his enemy of fenfation, at laft ftruck the decifive blow, in confequence of which the fquire's weapon flew out of his grafp, and he allowed our hero to be the better man. Satisfied with this acknowledgment, the victor walked up ftairs, with fuch elevation of fpirits, and infolence of mien, that nobody chofe to intimate the refolution which had been taken in his abfence: There having amufed himfelf for fome time in beholding the country dances, he retreated to his lodging, where he indulged himfelf all night in the contemplation of his own fuccefs.

Next day, in the forenoon, he went to vifit his partner; and the gentleman at whofe houfe fhe lived, having been informed of his family and condition, received him with great courtefy, as the acquaintance of his coufin Gauntlet, and invited him to dinner that fame day.

Emilia was remarkably well pleafed, when the underflood the iffue of his adventure, which began to make fome noife in town, even though it deprived her of a wealthy admirer. The fquire having confulted an attorney about the nature of the difpute, in hopes of being able to profecute Peregrine for an affault, found little encouragement to go to law: He therefore refolved to pocket the infult and injury he had undergone, and to difcontinue his addreffes to her who was the caufe of both.

Our lover being told by his miftrefs, that fhe propofed to ftay a fortnight longer at Windfor, he determined to enjoy her company all that time, and then to give her a convoy to the houfe of her mother, whom he longed to fee. In confequence of this plan, he every day contrived fome fresh party of pleasure for the ladies, to whom he had by this time free access; and entangled himself fo much in the fnares of love, that he feemed quite enchanted by Emilia's charms, which were now indeed almost irresistible. While he thus heedlefsly roved in the flowery paths of pleafure, his governor at Oxford, alarmed at the unufual duration of his abfence, went to the young gentlemen who had accompanied him in his excurfion, and very earneftly entreated them to tell him what they knew concerning his pupil. They accordingly gave him an account of the rencounter that happened between Peregrine and Mifs Emily Gauntlet in the Caftle, and mentioned circumstances fufficient to convince him that his charge was very dangeroufly engaged.

Far from having an authority over Peregrine, Mr. Jolter durft not even difoblige him; therefore, inftead of writing to the commodore, he took horfe immediately, and that fame night reached Windfor, where he found his ftray fheep very much furprifed at his unexpected arrival.

The governor defiring to have fome ferious converfation with him, they flut themfelves up in an apartment, when Jolter, with great folemnity, communicated the caufe of his journey, which was no other than his concern for his pupil's welfare; and very gravely undertook to prove, by mathematical demonstration, that this intrigue, if farther purfued, would tend to the young gentleman's ruin and difgrace. This fingular proposition raifed the curiofity of Peregrine, who promifed to yield all manner of attention, and defired him to begin without further preamble.

The governor, encouraged by this appearance of candour, expressed his fatisfaction in finding him fo open to conviction, and told him he would proceed upon geometrical principles. Then, hemming thrice, he observed, that no mathematical inquiries could be carried on, except upon certain data, or concession to truths, that were felf-evident; and therefore he must crave his affent to a few axioms, which he was fure Mr. Pickle would fee no reafon to difpute. " In the first place, then (faid he), you will grant, I hope, that youth and diferetion are, with refpect to each other, as two parallel lines, which, though infinitely produced, remain ftill equidiftant, and will never coincide; and then you must allow, that passion acts upon the human mind in a ratio compounded of the acutenefs of fenfe and conflitutional heat; and, thirdly, you will not deny that the angle of remorfe is equal to that of precipitation. The postulata being admitted (added he, taking pen, ink, and paper, and drawing a parallelogram), let youth be reprefented by the right line A B, and difcretion by another right line C D, parallel to the former. Complete the parallelogram A B C D, and let the point of interfection, B, reprefent perdition. Let paffion, reprefented under the letter C, have a motion in the direction CA. At the fame time, let another motion be communicated to it, in the direction C D, it will proceed in the diagonal C B, and defcribe it in the fame time that it would have defcribed the fide C A by the first motion, or the fide C D by the fecond. To understand the demonstration of this corollary, we must premise this obvious principle, that, when a body is acted upon by a motion of power parallel to a right line given in position, this power, or motion, has no effect to cause the body to approach towards that line, or recede from it, but to move in a line parallel to a right line only, as appears from the fecond law of motion; therefore C A being parallel to D B,"——

His pupil having liftened to him thus far, could contain himfelf no longer, but interrupted the inveftigation with a loud laugh, and told him, that his poftulata put him in mind of a ceatain learned and ingenious gentleman, who undertook to difprove the exiftence of natural evil, and afked no other datum on which to found his demonstration, but an acknowledgment that every thing that is is right. "You may therefore (faid he, in a peremptory tone) fpare yourfelf the trouble of torturing your invention; for after all, I am pretty certain that I fhall want capacity to comprehend the difcuffion of your lemma, and confequently be obliged to refuse my affent to your deduction."

Mr. Jolter was difconcerted at this declaration, and fo much offended at Peregrine's difrefpect, that he could not help expression is displeasure, by telling him flatly, that he was too violent and headstrong to be reclaimed by reason and gentle means; that he (the tutor) must be obliged, in the discharge of his duty and conficience to inform the commodore of his pupil's imprudence, that, if the laws of this realm were effectual, they would take cognizance of the gipfy who had led him astray; and observed, by way of contrast, that, if such a preposterous intrigue had happened in France, the would have been clapped up in a convent two years ago.

Our lover's eyes kindled with indignation, when he heard his miftrefs treated with fuch irreverence. He could fcarce refrain from inflicting manual chaftifement on the blafphemer, whom he reproached in his wrath as an arrogant pedant, without either delicacy or fenfe; and cautioned him against using any fuch impertment freedoms with his affairs for the future, on pain of incurring more fevere effects of his referement.

Mr. Jolter, who entertained very high notions of that veneration to which he thought himfelf entitled by his character and qualifications, had not bore, without repining, his want of influence and authority over his pupil, againft whom he cherifhed a particular grudge ever fince the adventure of the painted eye; and therefore, on this occafion, his politic forbearance had been overcome by the accumulated motives of his difguft. Indeed, he would have refigned his charge with difdain, had he not been encouraged to perfevere, by the hopes of a good living which Trunnion had in his gift, or known how to difpole of himfelf for the prefent to better advantage.

CHAPTER XXV.

He receives a letter from his aunt, breaks with the commodore, and difobliges the lieutenant, who, neverthelefs, undertakes his caufe.

MEANWHILE he quitted the youth in high dudgeon, and that fame evening defpatched a letter for Mrs. Trunnion, which was dictated by the first transports of his passion, and of course replete with fevere animadversions on the misconduct of his pupil.

In confequence of this complaint, it was not long before Peregrine received an epiftle from his aunt, wherein fhe commemorated all the circumftances of the commodore's benevolence towards him, when he was helplefs and forlorn, deferted and abandoned by his own parents, upbraided him for his mifbehaviour, and neglect of his tutor's advice, and infifted upon his breaking off all intercourfe with that girl who had feduced his youth, as he valued the continuance of her affection and her hufband's regard.

As our lover's own ideas of generofity were extremely refined, he was fhocked at the indelicate infinuations of Mrs. Trunnion, and felt all the pangs of an ingenuous mind that labours under obligations to a perfon whom it contemns. Far from obeying her injunction, or humb ling himfelf by a fubmiffive anfwer to her reprehension, his refentment buoyed him up above every felfish confideration; he refolved to attach himfelf to Emilia, if poffible, more than ever; and although he was tempted to punish the officious of Jolter, by recriminating upon his life and conversation, he generously withstood the impulse of his passion, because he knew that his governor had no other dependence than the good opinion of the commodore. He could not, however, digest in filence the fevere exposituations of his aunt; to which he replied by the following letter, addreffed to her hufband.

" SIR,

" THOUGH my temper could never ftoop to offer, nor, I believe, your disposition deign to receive, that grofs incenfe which the illiberal only expect, and none but the bafe-minded condescend to pay, my fentiments have always done juffice to your generofity, and my intention fcrupuloufly adhered to the dictates of my duty. Confcious of this integrity of heart, I cannot but feverely feel your lady's unkind (I will not call it ungenerous) recapitulation of the favours I have received; and, as I take it for granted, that you knew and approved of her letter, I must beg leave to assure you, that, far from being fwayed by menaces and reproach, I am determined to embrace the most abject extremity of fortune, rather than fubmit to fuch a difhonourable compulsion. When I am treated in a more delicate and refpectable manner, I hope I fhall behave as becomes,

SIR, Your obliged P. PICKLE."

The commodore, who did not underftand those nice diffinctions of behaviour, and dreaded the confequence of Peregrine's amour, against which he was strangely prepossed for the example at the infolence and obstinacy of his adopted ion; to whose epistle he wrote the following answer, which was transmitted by the hands of Hatchway, who had orders to bring the delinquent along with him to the garrifon. " Heark ye child,

"You need not bring your fine fpeeches to bear upon me. You only expend your ammunition to no purpofe. Your aunt told you nothing but truth; for it is always fair and honeft to be above board d'ye fee. I am informed as how you are in chafe of a painted galley, which will decoy you upon the flats of deftruction, unlefs you keep a better look-out and a furer reckoning than you have hitherto done; and I have fent Jack Hatchway to fee how the land lies, and warn you of your danger: If fo be as you will put about fhip, and let him fteer you into this harbour, you fhall meet with a fafe birth and friendly reception; but if you refufe to alter your courfe, you cannot expect any further affiftance from yours, as you behave,

HAWSER TRUNNION."

Peregrine was equally piqued and difconcerted at the receipt of this letter, which was quite different from what he had expected, and declared in a refolute tone to the lieutenant, who brought it, that he might return as foon as he pleafed, for he was determined to confult his own inclination, and remain for fome time longer where he was.

Hatchway endeavoured to perfuade him by all the arguments which his fagacity and friendship could supply, to fhow a little more deference for the old man, who was by this time rendered fretful and peevifh by the gout, which now hindered him from enjoying himfelf as ufual, and who might, in his paffion, take fome ftep very much to the detriment of the young gentleman, whom he had hitherto confidered as his own fon. Among other remonftrances, Jack observed that mayhaps Peregrine had got under Emilia's hatches, and did not choofe to fet her adrift; and if that was the cafe, he himfelf would take charge of the veffel, and fee her cargo fafely delivered; for he had a respect for the young woman, and his needle pointed towards matrimony; and as, in all probability, fhe could not be much the worfe for the wear, he would make shift to feud through life with her under an easy fail.

Our lover was deaf to all his admonitions, and, having thanked him for this laft inftance of his complaifance, repeated his refolution of adhering to his first purpose. Hatchway having profited so little by mild exhortations, affumed a more peremptory aspect, and plainly told him he neither could nor would go home without him; so he had best make immediate preparation for the voyage.

Peregrine made no other reply to this declaration than by a contemptuous fmile, and role from his feat in order to retire; upon which the lieutenant ftarted up, and pofting himfelf by the door, protefted, with fome menacing gestures, that he would not fuffer him to run ahead neither. The other, incenfed at his prefumption, in attempting to detain him by force, tripped up his wooden leg, and laid him on his back in a moment; then walked deliberately towards the park, in order to indulge his reflection, which at that time teemed with difagreeable thoughts. He had not proceeded two hundred fteps, when he heard fomething blowing and ftamping behind him; and, looking back, perceived the lieutenant at his heels, with rage and indignation in his countenance. This exafperated feaman, impatient of the affront he had received, and forgetting all the circumstances of their former intimacy, advanced with great eagerness to his old friend, faying, " Look ye, brother, you're a faucy boy, and if you was at fea, I would have your backfide brought to the Davit for your difobedience; but as we are on fhore, you and I must crack a pistol at one another; here is a brace, you fhall take which you pleafe."

Peregrine, upon recollection, was forry for having been laid under the neceffity of difobliging honeft Jack, and very frankly afked his pardon for what he had done. But this condeicenfion was mifinterpreted by the other, who refufed any other fatisfaction but that which an officer ought to claim; and, with fome irreverent expressions, afked if Perry was afraid of his bacon. The youth, inflamed at this unjust infinuation, darted a ferocious look at the challenger, told him he had paid but too much regard to his infirmities, and bid him walk forward to the park, where he would foon convince him of his error, if he thought his conceffion proceeded from fear.

About this time, they were overtaken by Pipes, who having heard the lieutenant's fall, and feen him pocket his Vol. II. piftols, fufpected that there was a quarrel in the cafe, and followed him with a view of protecting his mafter. Peregrine feeing him arrive, and gueffing his intention, affumed an air of ferenity, and pretending that he had left his handkerchief at the inn, ordered his man to go thither and fetch it to him in the park, where he would find them at his return. This command was twice repeated before Tom would take any other notice of the meffage, except by fhaking his head; but being urged with many threats and curfes to obedience, he gave them to underftand that he knew their drift too well to truft them by themfelves. " As for you, Lieutenant Hatchway (faid he), I have been your thip-mate, and know you to be a failor, that's enough; and as for mafter, I know him to be as good a man as ever stepped betwixt stem and stern, whereby, if you have any thing to fay to him, I am your man, as the faying is. Here's my fappling, and I don't value your crackers of a rope's end." This oration, the longest that ever Pipes was known to make, he concluded with a flourish of his cudgel, and enforced with such determined refufals to leave them, that they found it impoffible to bring the caufe to mortal arbitrement at that time, and ftrolled about the park in profound filence; during which, Hatchway's indignation fubfiding, he all of a fudden thruft out his hand as an advance to reconciliation, which being cordially fhaken by Peregrine, a general pacification enfued; and was followed by a confultation about the means of extricating the youth from his prefent perplexity. Had his difposition been like that of most other young men, it would have been no difficult tafk to overcome his difficulties; but fuch was the obftinacy of his pride, that he deemed himfelf bound in honour to refent the letters he had received ; and, inftead of fubmitting to the pleafure of the commodore, expected an acknowledgment from him, without which he would liften to no terms of accommodation. "Had I been his own fon (faid he), I fhould have bore his reproof, and fued for forgiveness; but knowing myfelf to be on the footing of an orphan, who depends entirely upon his benevolence, I am jealous of every thing that can be conftrued into difrespect, and infift upon being treated with the most punctual regard. I shall now make application to my father, who is obliged to provide for me by the ties of nature, as well as the laws of the land; and if he fhall refufe to do me juffice, I can never want employment while men are required for his Majefty's fervice.

The lieutenant, alarmed at this intimation, begged he would take no new ftep until he fhould hear from him; and that very evening fet out for the garrifon, where he gave Trunnion an account of the mifcarriage of his negotiation, told him how highly Peregrine was offended at the letter, communicated the young gentleman's fentiments and refolution, and, finally, allured him, that, unlefs he fhould think proper to afk pardon for the offence he had committed, he would, in all appearance, never more behold the face of his godfon.

The old commodore was utterly confounded at this piece of intelligence; he had expected all the humility of obedience and contrition from the young man; and, inftead of that, received nothing but the most indignant opposition, and even found himself in the circumstances of an offender, obliged to make atonement, or forfeit all correspondence with his favourite. These infolent conditions at first threw him into an agony of wrath, and he vented execrations with fuch rapidity, that he left himfelf no time to breathe, and had almost been fuffocated with his choler. He inveighed bitterly against the ingratitude of Peregrine, whom he mentioned with many opprobrious epithets, and fwore that he ought to be keel-hawled for his prefumption; but when he began to reflect more coolly upon the fpirit of the young gentleman, which had already manifested itself on many occasions, and listened to the fuggestions of Hatchway, whom he had always confidered as an oracle in his way, his refentment abated, and he determined to take Perry into favour again; this placability being not a little facilitated by Jack's narrative of our hero's intrepid behaviour at the affembly, as well as in the conteft with him in the park. But still this plaguy amour occurred like a bugbear to his imagination ; for he held it as an infallible maxim, that woman was an eternal fource of milery to man. Indeed this apothegm he feldom repeated fince his marriage, except in the company of a very few intimates, to whole fecrecy and diferention he could truft. Finding Jack himfelf at a nonplus in the K ij affair of Emilia, he confulted Mrs. Trunnion, who was equally furprifed and offended, when the underftood that her letter did not produce the defired effect; and, after having imputed the youth's obftinacy to his uncle's unfeafonable indulgence, had recourfe to the advice of the parfon, who, ftill with an eye to his friend's advantage, counfelled them to fend the young gentleman on his travels, in the courfe of which he would, in all probability, forget the amufements of his greener years. The propofal was judicious, and immediately approved, when Trunnion going into his clofet, after divers efforts, produced the following billet, with which Jack departed for Windfor that fame afternoon.

" My good lad,

" IF I gave offence in my laft letter, I'm forry for't, d'ye fee; I thought it was the likelieft way to bring you up; but, in time to come, you fhall have a larger lwing of cable. When you can fpare time, I fhall be glad if you will make a fhort trip, and fee your aunt, and him who is

> Your loving godfather and humble fervant, HAWSER TRUNNION.

P. S. If you want money, you may draw upon me payable at fight."

CHAPTER XXVI.

He becomes melancholy and defpondent; is favoured with a condefcending letter from his uncle; reconciles himfelf to his governor, and fets out with Emilia and her friend for Mrs. Gauntlet's houfe.

PEREGRINE, fortified as he was with pride and indignation, did not fail to feel the fmarting fuggeftions of his prefent fituation; after having lived fo long in an affluent and imperious manner, he could ill brook the thoughts of fubmitting to the mortifying exigencies of life. All the gaudy fchemes of pomp and pleafure, which his luxuriant imagination had formed, began to diffolve, a train of melancholy ideas took poffeffion of his thoughts, and the profpect of lofing Emilia was not the least part of his affliction. Though he endeavoured to suppress the chagrin that preyed upon his heart, he could not conceal the difturbance of his mind from the penetration of that amiable young lady, who fympathized with him in her heart. though the could not give her tongue the liberty of afking the caufe of his diforder; for, notwithftanding all the ardour of his addreffes, he never could obtain from her the declaration of a mutual flame; becaufe, though he had hitherto treated her with the utmost reverence of refpect, he had never once mentioned the final aim of his paffion. However honourable fhe fuppofed it to be, fhe had difcernment enough to forfee, that vanity or intereft, co-operating with the levity of youth, might one day deprive her of her lover, and the was too proud to give him any handle of exulting at her expence. Although he was received by her with the most diftinguished civility, and even an intimacy of friendship, all his folicitations could never extort from her an acknowledgment of love; on the contrary, being of a gay difpolition, the fometimes coquetted with other admirers, that his attention thus whetted might never abate, and that he might fee fhe had. other refources, in cafe he fhould flag in his affection.

This being the prudential plan on which fhe acted, it cannot be fuppofed that fhe would condefcend to inquire into the flate of his thoughts, when the faw him thus affected; but she, nevertheless, imposed that 'task on her coufin and confident, who, as they walked together in the park, obferved that he feemed to be out of humour. When this is the cafe, fuch a queftion generally increases the difeafe; at least it had that effect upon Peregrine, who replied fomewhat peevifhly, " I affure you, Madam, you never was more miftaken in your obfervations."----- " I think fo too (faid Emilia), for I never faw Mr. Pickle in higher fpirits."-This ironical encomium completed his confusion; he affected to fmile, but it was a fmile of anguish, and in his heart he curfed the vivacity of both. He could not for his foul recollect himfelf fo as to utter one connected fentence; and the fufpicion that they obferved every circumstance of his behaviour, threw fuch a damp K iij on his fpirits, that he was quite overwhelmed with fhame and refentment, when Sophy, caffing her eyes towards the gate, faid, "Yonder is your fervant, Mr. Pickle, with another man who feems to have a wooden leg." Peregrine flarted at this intelligence, and immediately underwent fundry changes of complexion, knowing that his fate in a great measure depended upon the information he would receive from his friend.

Hatchway advancing to the company, after a brace of fea bows to the ladies, took the youth afide, and put the commodore's letter into his hand, which threw him into fuch an agitation, that he could fearce pronounce " Ladies, will you give me leave ?" When, in confequence of their permiffion, he attempted to open the billet, he fumbled with fuch manifeft diforder, that his mittrefs, who watched his motions, began to think there was fomething very interefting in the meffage; and fo much was fhe affected with his concern, that fhe was fain to turn her head another way, and wipe the tears from her lovely eyes.

Meanwhile Peregrine no fooner read the firft fentence, than his countenance, which before was overcaft with a deep gloom, began to be lighted up, and every feature unbending by degrees, he recovered his ferenity. Having perufed the letter, his eyes fparkling with joy and gratitude, he hugged the lieutenant in his arms, and prefented him to the ladies as one of his beft friends. Jack met with a moft gracious reception, and fhook Emilia by the hand, telling her, with the familiar appellation of old acquaintance, that he did not care how foon he was mafter of fuch another clean-going frigate as herfelf.

The whole company partook of this favourable change that evidently appeared in our lover's recollection, and enlivened his converfation with fuch an uncommon flow of fprightlinefs and good humour, as even made an imprefilion on the iron countenance of Pipes himfelf, who actually fmiled with fatisfaction as he walked behind them.

The evening being pretty far advanced, they directed their courfe homeward; and, while the valet attended Hatchway to the inn, Peregrine efforted the ladies to their lodgings, where he owned the juftnefs of Sophy's remark, in faying he was out of humour, and told them he had been extremely chagrined at a difference which had happened between him and his uncle, to whom (by the letter which they had feen him receive) he now found himfelf happily reconciled.

Having received their congratulations, and declined ftaying to fup with them, on account of the longing defire he had to converse with his friend Jack, he took his leave, and repaired to the inn, where Hatchway informed him of every thing that had happened in the garrilon upon his representations. Far from being difgusted, he was perfectly well pleafed with the profpect of going abroad, which flattered his vanity and ambition, gratified his thirst after knowledge, and indulged that turn for obfervation, for which he had been remarkable from his most tender years. Neither did he believe a short absence would tend to the prejudice of his love, but, on the contrary, enhance the value of his heart, becaufe he fhould return better accomplifhed, and confequently a more welcome offering to his miftrefs. Elevated with thefe fentiments, his heart dilated with joy, and the fluices of his natural benevolence being opened by this happy turn of his affairs, he fent his compliments to Mr. Jolter, to whom he had not fpoken during a whole week, and defired he would favour Mr. Hatchway and him with his company at fupper.

The governor was not weak enough to decline this invitation; in confequence of which he forthwith appeared, and was cordially welcomed by the relenting pupil, who expressed his forrow for the mifunderstanding which had prevailed between them, and affured him, that, for the future, he would avoid giving him any just cause of complaint. Jolter, who did not want affection, was melted by this acknowledgment, which he could not have expected, and earnestly protested, that his chief study had always been, and ever should be, to promote Mr. Pickle's interest and happines.

The beft part of the night being fpent in the circulation of a cheerful glafs, the company broke up; and next morning Peregrine went out with a view of making his miftrefs acquainted with his uncle's intention of fending him out of the kingdom for his improvement, and of faying every thing which he thought neceffary for the intereft of his love. He found her at breakfast with her coufin; and, as he was very full of the fubject of his vifit, had fcarce fixed himfelf in his feat, when he brought it upon the carpet, by afking with a fmile, if the ladies had any commands for Paris? Emilia, at this queftion began to ftare, and her confident defired to know who was going thither ? He no fooner gave them to underftand that he himfelf intended in a fhort time to vifit that capital, than his miftrefs, with great precipitation, withed him a good journey, and affected to talk with indifference about the pleafures he would enjoy in France : But when he ferioufly affured Sophy, who afked if he was in earneft, that his uncle actually infifted upon his making a fhort tour, the tears gufhed in poor Emilia's eyes, and fhe was at great pains to conceal her concern, by observing that the tea was fo fcalding hot, as to make her eyes water. This pretext was too thin to impofe upon her lover, or even deceive the obfervation of her friend Sophy, who, after breakfaft, took an opportunity of quitting the room.

Thus left by themfelves, Peregrine imparted to her what he had learned of the commodore's intention, without, however, mentioning a fyllable of his being offended at their correspondence, and accompanied his information with fuch fervent vows of eternal conftancy and folemn promifes of a fpeedy return, that Emilia's heart, which had been invaded by a fufpicion that this fcheme of travelling was the effect of her lover's inconftancy, began to be more at eafe; and the could not help fignifying her approbation of his defign.

This affair being amicably compromifed, he afked how foon the propoled to fet out for her mother's houfe; and underftanding that her departure was fixed for next day but one, and that her coufin Sophy intended to accompany her in her father's chariot, he repeated his intention of attending her. In the mean time he difmiffed his governor and the lieutenant to the garrifon, with his compliments to his aunt and the commodore, and a faithful promife of his being with them in fix days at fartheft.

Thefe previous measures being taken, he, attended by Pipes, fet out with the ladies; and they had also a convoy for twelve miles from Sophy's father, who at parting recommended them pioufly to the care of Peregrine, with whom, by this time, he was perfectly well acquainted.

CHAPTER XXVII.

They meet with a dreadful alarm on the road; arrive at their journey's end. Peregrine is introduced to Emily's brother; thefe two young gentlemen mifunderftand each other. Pickle departs for the garrifon.

As they travelled at an eafy rate, they had performed fomething more than one half of their journey, when they were benighted near an inn, at which they refolved to lodge: The accommodation was very good; they fupped together with great mirth and enjoyment, and it was not till after he had been warned by the yawns of the ladies, that he conducted them to their apartment; where withing them good night, he retired to his own, and went to reft.

The houfe was crowded with country people who had been at a neighbouring fair, and now regaled themfelves with ale and tobacco in the yard; fo that their confideration, which at any time was but flender, being now overwhelmed by this debauch, they ftaggered into their refpective kennels, and left a lighted candle flicking to one of the wooden pillars that fupported the gallery.— The flame in a little time laid hold on the wood, which was as dry as tinder, and the whole gallery was on fire, when Peregrine fuddenly awaked, and found himfelf almoft fuffocated. He fprung up in an inftant, flipped on his breeches, and throwing open the door of his chamber, faw the whole entry in a blaze.

Heavens! what were the emotions of his foul, when he beheld the volumes of flame and fmoke rolling towards the room where his dear Emilia lay! Regardlefs of his own danger, he darted himfelf through the thickeft of the gloom, when knocking hard, and calling at the fame time to the ladies, with the most anxious entreaty to be admitted, the door was opened by Emilia in her fhift, who afked, with the utmost trepidation, what was the matter? He made no reply, but fnatching her up in his arms, like another Æneas, bore her through the flames to a place of fafety; where, leaving her before fhe could recollect herfelf, or pronounce one word, but " Alas! my coufin Sophy!" he flew back to the refcue of that young lady, and found her already delivered by Pipes, who, having been alarmed by the fmell of fire, had got up, rufhed immediately to the chamber where he knew thefe companions lodged, and (Emily being faved by her lover) brought off Mifs Sophy with the lofs of his own fhock head of hair, which was finged off in his retreat.

By this time the whole inn was alarmed; every lodger, as well as fervant, exerted himfelf, in order to ftop the progrefs of this calamity; and there being a well replenifhed horfe-pond in the yard, in lefs than an hour the fire was totally extinguifhed, without having done any other damage than that of confuming about two yards of the wooden gallery.

All this time our young gentleman clofely attended his fair charge, each of whom had fwooned with apprehenfion; but as their conftitutions were good, and their fpirits not eafily diffipated, when upon reflection they found themfelves and their company fafe, and that the flames were happily quenched, the tumult of their fears fubfided, they put on their clothes, recovered their good humour, and began to rally each other on the trim in which they had been fecured. Sophy obferved, that now Mr. Pickle had an indifputable claim to her coufin's affection; and therefore the ought to lay afide all affected referve for the future, and frankly avow the fentiments of her heart. Emily retorted the argument, putting her in mind, that, by the fame claim, Mr. Pipes was entitled to the like return from her. Her friend admitted the force of the conclusion, provided the could not find means of fatisfying her deliverer in another fhape; and turning to the valet, who happened to be prefent, asked, if his heart was not otherwife engaged? Tom, who did not conceive the meaning of the queftion, flood filent according to cuftom; and the interrogation being repeated, anfwered, with a grin, " Heart-whole as a bifcuit, I'll affure you, Mif-trefs." " What ? (faid Emilia) have you never been in love, Thomas ?" " Yes, forfooth (replied the valet without hefitation), fometimes of a morning." Peregrine could not help laughing, and his miftrefs locked a little difconcerted at this blunt repartee; while Sophy flipping a purfe into his hand, told him there was fomething to purchase a periwig. Tom, having confulted his master's eyes, refused the prefent, faying, " No, thank ye as much as if I did." And though the infifted upon his putting it in his pocket, as a fmall testimony of her gratitude, he could not be prevailed upon to avail himfelf of her generofity; but, following her to the other end of the room, thrust it into her fleeve without ceremony, exclaiming, " I'll be damn'd to hell if I do." Peregrine having checked him for his boorifh behaviour, fent him out of the room, and begged that Mifs Sophy would not endeavour to debauch the morals of his fervant, who, rough and uncultivated as he was, had fenfe enough to perceive that he had no pretention to any fuch acknowledgment. But the argued with great vehemence, that fhe should never be able to make an acknowledgment adequate to the fervice he had done her, and that the thould never be perfectly cafy in her own mind, until the found fome opportunity of manifesting the fense the had of the obligation : " I do not pretend (faid fhe) to reward Mr. Pipes; but I fhall be abfolutely unhappy, unlefs I am allowed to give him fome token of my regard."

Peregrine, thus earnefuly folicited, defired that, fince fhe was bent upon difplaying her generofity, fhe would not beftow upon him any pecuniary gratification, but honour him with fome trinket, as a mark of confideration; becaufe he himfelf had fuch a particular value for the fellow, on account of his attachment and fidelity, that he fhould be forry to fee him treated on the footing of a common mercenary domeftic.

There was not one jewel in the poffeffion of this grateful young lady, that the would not have gladly given as a recompense, or badge of distinction to her refcuer; but his mafter pitched upon a feal ring of no great value, that hung at her watch, and Pipes being called in, had permillion to accept that testimony of Mil's Sophy's favour. Tom received it accordingly with fundry fcrapes, and, having kiffed it with great devotion, put it on his little finger, and ftrutted off, extremely proud of his acquisition. Emilia, with a most enchanting sweetness of aspect, told her lover, that he had inftructed her how to behave towards him; and, taking a diamond ring from her finger, defired he would wear it for her fake. He received the pledge as became him, and prefented another in exchange, which the at first refused, alleging, that it would deftroy the intent of her acknowledgment; but Peregrine affured her, he had accepted her jewel, not as a proof of her gratitude, but as the mark of her love; and that, if the refufed a mutual token, he fhould look upon himfelf as the object of her difdain. Her eyes kindled, and her cheeks glowed, with refentment, at this impudent intimation, which the confidered as an unfeatonable infult; and the young gentleman, perceiving her emotion, flood corrected for his temerity, and afked pardon for the liberty of his remonstrance, which he hoped the would afcribe to the prevalence of that principle alone which he had always taken pride in avowing.

Sophy, feeing him difconcerted, interpofed in his behalf, and chid her coufin for having practifed fuch unneceffary affectation; upon which Emilia, foftened into compliance, held out her finger as a fignal of her condefcention. Peregrine put on the ring with great eagernefs, mumbled her foft white hand in an ecftafy which would not allow him to confine his embraces to that limb, but urged him to feize her by the waift, and fnatch a delicions kifs from her love-pouting lips; nor would he leave her a butt to the ridicule of Sophy, on whofe mouth he inftantly committed a rape of the fame nature; fo that the two friends, countenanced by each other, reprehended him with fuch gentlenefs of rebuke, that he was almoft tempted to repeat the offence.

The morning being now lighted up, and the fervants of the inn on foot, he ordered fome chocolate for breakfast, and, at the defire of the ladies, fent Pipes to fee the horfes fed, and the chariot prepared, while he went to the bar, and difcharged the bill.

These measures being taken, they fet out about five o'clock, and having refreshed themfelves and their cattle at another inn on the road, proceeded in the afternoon. Without meeting with any other accident, they fasely arrived at the place of their defination, where Mrs. Gauntlet expressed her joy at feeing her old friend Mr. Pickle, whom, however, fhe kindly reproached for the long difcontinuance of his regard. Without explaining the caufe of that interruption, he protefted, that his love and efteem had never been difcontinued, and that, for the future, he fhould omit no occafion of teftifying how much he had her friendfhip at heart. She then made him acquainted with her fon, who at that time was in the houfe, being excufed from his duty by furlough.

This young man, whole name was Golfrey, was about the age of twenty, of a middling fize, vigorous make, remarkably well fhaped, and the fcars of the fmall pox, of which he bore a good number, added a peculiar manlinefs to the air of his countenance. His capacity was good, and his difpofition naturally frank and eafy; but he had been a foldier from his infancy, and his education was altogether in the military ftyle. He looked upon tafte and letters as mere pedantry, beneath the confideration of a gentleman; and every civil ftation of life as mean, when compared with the profeffion of arms. He had made great progrefs in the gymnaftic fciences of dancing, fencing, and riding, played perfectly well on the german flute, and, above all things, valued himfelf upon a fcrupulous obfervance of all the points of honour.

Had Peregrine and he confidered themfelves upon equal footing, in all probability they would have immediately entered into a league of intimacy and friendship : But this fufficient foldier looked upon his fifter's admirer as a young student, raw from the university, and utterly ignorant of mankind; while Squire Pickle beheld Godfrey in the light of a needy volunteer, greatly inferior to himfelf in fortune, as well as every other accomplishment. This mutual mifunderftanding could not fail of producing animofities. The very next day after Peregrine's arrival, fome fharp repartees paffed between them in prefence of the ladies, before whom each endeavoured to affert his own fuperiority. In these contests our hero never failed of obtaining the victory, becaufe his genius was more acute, and his talents better cultivated than those of his antagonist, who therefore took umbrage at his fuccess, became jealous of his reputation, and began to treat him with marks of fcorn and difrefpect.

His fifter faw, and dreading the confequence of his ferocity, not only took him to talk in private for his impolite behaviour, but also entreated her lover to make allowances for the roughness of her brother's education. He kindly affured her, that, whatever pains it might colt him to vanquifh his own impetuous temper, he would for her fake endure all the mortifications to which her brother's arrogance might expose him; and, after having ftayed with her two days, and enjoyed feveral private interviews, during which he acted the part of a most paffionate lover, he took his leave of Mrs. Gauntlet over night, and told the young ladies he would call early next morning to bid them farewell. He did not neglect this piece of duty, and found the two friends and breakfast already prepared in the parlour. All three being extremely affected with the thoughts of parting, a most pathetic filence for fome time prevailed, till Peregrine put an end to it, by lamenting his fate, in being obliged to exile himfelf to long from the dear object of his most interefting wifh. He begged, with the most earnest supplications, that fhe would now, in confideration of the cruel absence he must fuffer, give him the consolation which the had hitherto refuted, namely, that of knowing he poffeffed a place within her heart. The confident feconded his request, representing, that it was now no time to difguife her fentiments, when her lover was about to leave the kingdom, and might be in danger of contracting other connections, unlefs he was confirmed in his conftancy, by knowing how far he could depend upon her love; and, in fhort, the was plied with fuch irrefiftible importunities, that fhe anfwered, in the utmost confufion, "Though I have avoided literal acknowledgments, methinks the circumstances of my behaviour might have convinced Mr. Pickle, that I do not regard him as a common acquaintance." " My charming Emily ! (cried the impatient lover, throwing himfelf at her feet) why will you deal out my happiness in fuch scanty portions? Why will you thus mince the declaration which would overwhelm me with pleafure, and cheer my lonely reflection, while I figh amid the folitude of feparation ?" His fair mistrefs, melted by this image, replied, with the tears gufhing from her eyes, " I'm afraid I fhall feel that feparation more feverely than you imagine." Transported at this flattering confeffion, he prefied her to his breaft, and, while her head reclined upon his neck, mingled his tears with hers in great abundance, breathing the moft tender vows of eternal fidelity. The gentle heart of Sophy could not bear this fcene unmoved; the wept with fympathy, and encouraged the lovers to refign themfelves to the will of fate, and fupport their fpirits with the hope of meeting again on happier terms. Finally, after mutual promifes, exhortations, and endearments, Peregrine took his leave, his heart being fo full, that he could fcarce pronounce the word Adieu! and, mounting his horfe at the door, fet out with Pipes for the garrifon.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Peregrine is overtaken by Mr. Gauntlet, with whom he fights a duel, and contracts an intimate friendship. He arrives at the garrifon, and finds his mother as implacable as ever. He is infulted by his brother Gam, whose preceptor he disciplines with a horse-whip.

In order to expel the melancholy images that took poffeffion of his fancy, at parting from his miftrefs, he called in the flattering ideas of those pleasures he expected to enjoy in France; and, before he had rode ten miles, his imagination was effectually amused.

While he thus profecuted his travels by anticipation, and indulged himfelf in all the infolence of hope, at the turning of a lane he was all of a fudden overtaken by Emilia's brother on horfeback, who told him he was riding the fame way, and fhould be glad of his company.

This young gentleman, whether prompted by perfonal pique, or actuated with zeal for the honour of his family, had followed our hero, with a view of obliging him to explain the nature of his attachment to his fifter. Peregrine returned his compliment with fuch difdainful civility, as gave him room to believe that he fufpected his errand; and therefore, without further preamble, he declared his bufinefs in thefe words: "Mr. Pickle, you have carried on a correfpondence with my fifter for fome time, and I fhould be glad to know the nature of it."

To this queftion our lover replied, "Sir, I fhould be glad to know what title you have to demand that fatisfaction." " Sir (anfwered the other), I demand it in the capacity of a brother, jealous of his own honour, as well as of his fifter's reputation; and, if your intentions are ho-nourable, you will not refuse it." "Sir (faid Peregrine), I am not at prefent difposed to appeal to your opinion for the rectitude of my intentions; and I think you affume a little too much importance, in pretending to judge my conduct." " Sir (replied the foldier), I pretend to judge the conduct of every man who interferes with my concerns, and even to chaftife him, if I think he acts amifs." " Chaftife! (cried the youth, with indignation in his looks), fure you dare not apply that term to me !" " You are mistaken (faid Godfrey); I dare do any thing that becomes the character of a gentleman." " Gentleman, God wot! (replied the other, looking contemptuoufly at his equipage, which was none of the most superb), a very pretty gentleman truly !" The foldier's wrath was inflamed by this ironical repetition, the contempt of which his confcious poverty made him feel; and he called his antagonist Prefumptuous Boy! Infolent Upstart! with other epithets, which Perry retorted with great bitternefs. A formal challenge having paffed between them, they alighted at the first inn, and walked into the next field, in order to decide their quarrel by the fword. Having pitched upon the fpot, helped to pull off each other's boots, and laid alide their coats and wailtcoats, Mr. Gauntlet told his opponent, that he himfelf was looked upon in the army as an expert fwordfman; and that, if Mr. Pickle had not made that fcience his particular ftudy, they flould be upon a more equal footing in using piftols. Peregrine was too much incenfed to thank him for his plain dealing, and too confident of his own fkill, to relish the other's proposal, which he accordingly rejected : Then, drawing his fword, he obferved, that, were he to treat Mr. Gauntlet according to his deferts, he would order his man to punish his audacity with a horfe-whip. Exafperated at this expression, which he confidered as an indelible affront, he made no reply, but attacked his adverfary with equal ferocity and addrefs. The youth parried his first and second thurst, but received the third in the outfide of his fword arm. Though the wound was fuperficial, he was transported with rage at fight of his own blood, and returned the affault with fuch fury and precipitation, that Gauntlet, loth to take advantage of his unguarded heat, flood upon the defensive. In the fecond longe, Peregrine's weapon entering a kind of net work in the shell of Godfrey's fword, the blade snapped in two, and left him at the mercy of the foldier, who, far from making an infolent ufe of the victory he had gained, put up his Toledo with great deliberation, like a man who had been used to that kind of rencounters, and observed, that fuch a blade as Peregrine's was not to be trufted with a man's life : Then, advising the owner to treat a gentleman in diftrefs with more refpect for the future, he flipped on his boots, and, with fullen dignity of demeanour, stalked back to the inn.

Though Pickle was extremely mortified at his mifcarriage in this adventure, he was alfo ftruck with the behaviour of his antagonift, which affected him the more, as he underftood that Godfrey's fierte had proceeded from the jealous fenfibility of a gentleman declined into the vale of misfortune. Gauntlet's valour and moderation induced him to put a favourable conftruction on all thofe circumftances of that young foldier's conduct, which had before given him difguft. Though, in any other cafe, he would have induftrioufly avoided the least appearance of fubmiffion, he followed his conqueror to the inn, with a view of thanking him for his generous forbearance, and of foliciting his friendfhip and correfpondence.

Godfrey had his foot in the ftirrup, to mount, when Peregrine coming up to him, defired he would defer his departure for a quarter of an hour, and fayour him with a little private converfation. The foldier, who miftook the meaning of the requeft, immediately quitted his horfe, and followed Pickle into a chamber, where he expected to find a brace of piftols loaded on the table; but he was very agreeably deceived, when our hero, in the most refpectful terms, acknowledged his noble deportment in the field, owned, that till then he had mitunderftood his character, and begged that he would honour him with his intimacy and correfpondence.

Gauntler, who had feen undoubted proofs of Peregrine's Vol. II.

courage, which had confiderably raifed him in his efteem, and had fenfe enough to perceive that this conceffion was not owing to any fordid or finifter motive, embraced his offer with demonstrations of infinite fatisfaction. When he understood the terms on which Mr. Pickle was with his fister, he proffered his fervice in his turn, either as agent, mediator, or confident: Nay, to give his new friend a convincing proof of his fincerity, he disclosed to him a passion which he had for some time entertained for his cousin Miss Sophy, though he durst not reveal his fentiments to her father, left he should be offended at his prefumption, and withdraw his protection from the family.

Peregrine's generous heart was wrung with anguifh, when he underftood that this young gentleman, who was the only fon of a diftinguifhed officer, had carried arms for the fpace of five years, without being able to obtain a fubalærn's commiffion, though he had always behaved with remarkable regularity and fpirit, and acquired the friendfhip and efteem of all the officers under whom he had ferved.

He would, at that time, with the utmost pleafure, have fhared his finances with him; but, as he would not run the rifk of offending the young foldier's delicacy of honour, by a premature exertion of his liberality, he refolved to infinuate himfelf into an intimacy with him, before he would venture to take fuch freedoms; and, with that view, preffed Mr. Gauntlet to accompany him to the garrifon, where he did not doubt of having influence enough to make him a welcome gueft. Godfrey thanked him very courteoufly for his invitation, which he faid he could not immediately accept; but promifed, if he would favour him with a letter, and fix the time at which he proposed to fet out for France, he would endeavour to vifit him at the commodore's habitation, and from thence give him a convoy to Dover. This new treaty being fettled, and a doffil of lint, with a fnip of plaster, applied to our adventurer's wound, he parted from the brother of his dear Emilia, to whom, and his friend Sophy, he fent his kindeft withes; and, having lodged one night upon the road, arrived next day in the afternoon at the garrifon, where he found all his friends in good health, and overjoyed at his return.

The commodore, who was by this time turned of feventy, and altogether crippled by the gout, feldom went abroad; and, as his conversation was not very entertaining, had but little company within doors; fo that his fpirits must have quite stagnated, had they not been kept in motion by the conversation of Hatchway, and received, at different times a wholefome fillip from the difcipline of his fpoufe, who, by the force of pride, religion, and Coniac, had erected a most terrible tyranny in the house. There was fuch a quick circulation of domeftics in the family, that every fuit of livery had been worn by figures of all dimensions. Trunnion himself had, long before this time, yielded to the torrent of her arbitrary fway, though not without divers obstinate efforts to maintain his liberty; and now, that he was difabled by his infirmities, when he used to hear his Empress finging the loud Orthyan fong among the fervants below, he would often, in whifpers, communicate to the lieutenant hints of what he would do, if fo be as how he was not deprived of the use of his precious limbs. Hatchway was the only per-fon whom the temper of Mrs. Trunnion respected, either becaufe fhe dreaded his ridicule, or looked upon his perfon with eyes of affection. This being the fituation of things in the garrifon, it is not to be doubted that the old gentleman highly enjoyed the prefence of Peregrine, who found means to ingratiate himfelf fo effectually with his aunt, that, while he remained at home, fhe feemed to have exchanged the difpolition of a tigrefs, for that of a gentle kid: But he found his own mother as implacable, and his father as much hen-pecked as ever.

Gamaliel, who now very feldom enjoyed the converfation of his old friend the commodore, had fome time ago entered into an amicable fociety, confifting of the barber, apothecary, attorney, and excifeman of the parifh, among whom he ufed to fpend the evening at Tunley's, and liften to their difputes upon philofophy and politics with great comfort and edification, while his fovereign lady domineered at home as ufual, vifited with great pomp in the neighbourhood, and employed her chief care in the education of her darling fon Gam, who was now in the fifteenth year of his age, and fo remarkable for his perverfe difpofition, that, in fpite of his mother's influence and authority, he was not only hated, but alfo defpifed, both at home and abroad. She had put him under the tuition of the curate, who lived in the family, and was obliged to attend him in all his exercifes and excurfions. This governor was a low bred fellow, who had neither experience nor ingenuity, but poffefied a large fund of adulation and fervile complaifance, by which he had gained the good graces of Mrs. Pickle, and prefided over all her deliberations, in the fame manner as his fuperior managed thofe of Mrs. Trunnion.

He had one day rode out to take the air with his pupil, who, as I have already obferved, was odious to the poor people, for having killed their dogs, and broken their enclofures, and, on account of his hump, was diftinguished by the title of My Lord, when, in a narrow lane they chanced to meet Peregrine on horfeback.

The young fquire no fooner perceived his elder brother, against whom he had been instructed to bear the most inveterate grudge, than he refolved to infult him en pa/fant, and actually rode against him full gallop. Our hero, gueffing his aim, fixed himfelf in his ftirrups, and, by a dexterous management of the reins, avoided the flock in fuch a manner, as that their legs only fhould encounter, by which means My Lord was tilted out of his faddle, and, in a twinkling, laid fprawling in the dirt. The governor, enraged at the difgrace of his charge, advanced with great infolence and fury, and ftruck at Peregrine with his whip. Nothing could be more agreeable to our young gentleman than this affault, which furnished him with an opportunity of chaftifing an officious wretch, whofe petulance and malice he had longed to punifh. He therefore, fpurring up his horfe towards his antagonift, overthrew him in the middle of a hedge. Before he had time to recollect himfelf from the confusion of the fall, Pickle alighted in a trice, and exercifed his horfe-whip with fuch agility about the curate's face and ears, that he was fain to proftrate himfelf before his enraged conqueror, and implore his forbearance in the most abject terms. While Peregrine was thus employed, his brother Gam had made shift to rife and attack him in the rear; for which reason, when the tutor was quelled, the victor faced about, fnatched the weapon out of his hand, and having broken it to pieces, remounted his horfe, and rode off, without deigning to honour him with any other notice.

The condition in which they returned produced infinite clamour against the conqueror, who was represented as a ruffian who had lain in ambush to make away with his brother, in whose defence the curate was faid to have received those cruel stripes, that hindered him from appearing for three whole weeks in the performance of his duty at church.

Complaints were made to the commodore, who, hiving inquired into the circumftances of the affair, approved of what his nephew had done; adding, with many oaths, that, provided Peregrine had been out of the fcrape, he wifhed Crook-back had broke his neck in the fall.

CHAPTER XXIX.

He projects a plan of revenge, which is executed against the curate.

Our hero, exafperated at the villany of the curate in the treacherous misrepresentation he had made of this rencounter, determined to practife upon him a method of revenge, which fhould be not only effectual, but also unattended with any bad confequence to himfelf. For this purpose he and Hatchway, to whom he imparted his plan, went to the alehouse one evening, and called for an empty room, knowing there was no other but that which they had chofen for the scene of action. This apartment was a fort of a parlour that fronted the kitchen, with a window towards the yard; where, after they had fat fome time, the lieutenant found means to amufe the landlord in difcourfe, while Peregrine, ftepping out into the yard, by the talent of mimicry which he poffeffed in a furprifing degree, counterfeited a dialogue between the curate and Tunley's wife. This reaching the ears of the publican, for whofe hearing it was calculated, inflamed his naturally jealous difposition to fuch a degree, that he could not conceal his emotion, but made an hundred efforts to quit the room; while the lieutenant, fmoking his pipe with great gravity, as if he neither heard what paffed, nor took L iij notice of the landlord's diforder, detained him on the fpot by a fucceffion of queftions which he could not refufe to anfwer, though he flood fweating with agony all the time, ftretching his neck every inftant towards the window through which the voices were conveyed, fcratching his head, and exhibiting fundry other fymptoms of impatience and agitation. At length, the fuppofed converfation came to fuch a pitch of amorous complaifance, that the hufband, quite frantic with his imaginary difgrace, rufhed out at the door, crying, "Coming, Sir." But, as he was obliged to make a circuit round one half of the houfe, Peregrine had got in by the window before Tunley arrived in the yard.

According to the feigned intelligence he had received, he ran directly to the barn, in expectation of making fome very extraordinary difcovery; and having employed fome minutes in rummaging the ftraw to no purpofe, returned in a ftate of diftraction to the kitchen, juft as his wife chanced to enter at the other door. The circumftance of her appearance confirmed him in the opinion that the deed was done. As the difeafe of being henpecked was epidemic in the parifh, he durft not express the leaft hint of his uneafinefs to her, but refolved to take vengeance on the libidinous prieft, who, he imagined, had corrupted the chaftity of his fpoufe.

The two confederates, in order to be certified that their fcheme had taken effect, as well as to blow up the flame which they had kindled, called for Tunley, in whofe countenance they could eafily difcern his confusion. Peregrine, defiring him to fit down and drink a glafs with them, began to interrogate him about his family, and, among other things, afked him how long he had been married to that handfome wife? This queftion, which was put with an arch fignificance of look, alarmed the publican, who began to fear that Pickle had overheard his difhonour; and this fufpicion was not at all removed, when the lieutenant, with a fly regard, pronounced, "Tunley, wan't you noofed by the curate?" " Yes, I was," replied the landlord, with an eagerness and perplexity of tone, as if he thought the lieutenant knew that thereby hung a tale; and Hatchway supported this sufpicion, by anfwering, " Nay, as for that matter, the curate may be a very fufficient man in his way." This transition from his wife to the curate; convinced him that his fhame was known to his guefts; and, in the transport of his indignation, he pronounced with great emphasis, "A fufficient man! odds heart! I believe they are wolves in fheep's clothing. I wish to God I could fee the day, mafter, ...when there shall not be a priest, an exciseman, or a cuftomhouse officer in this kingdom. As for that fellow of a curate, if I do catch him—It don't fignify talking—But, by the Lord !—Gentlemen, my fervice to you."

The affociates being fatisfied, by thefe abrupt infinuations, that they had fo far fucceeded in their aim, waited with impatience two or three days, in expectation of hearing that Tunley had fallen upon fome method of being revenged for this imaginary wrong : But finding that either his invention was too fhallow, or his inclination too languid, to gratify their defire of his own accord, they determined to bring the affair to fuch a crifis, that he fhould not be able to withftand the opportunity of executing his vengeance. With this view they one evening hired a boy to run to Mr. Pickle's houfe, and tell the curate, that Mrs. Tunley being taken fuddenly ill, her hufband defired he would come immediately, and pray with her. Meanwhile, they had taken poffeilion of a room in the house; and Hatchway engaging the landlord in converfation, Peregrine, in his return from the yard, obferved, as if by accident, that the parfon was gone into the kitchen, in order, as he fuppofed, to catechife Tunley's wife.

The publican ftarted at this intelligence, and, under pretence of ferving another company in the next room, went out to the barn, where arming himfelf with a flail, he repaired to a lane through which the curate was under a neceffity of paffing in his way home. There he lay in ambufh, with fell intent; and when the fuppofed author of his fhame arrived, greeted him in the dark with fuch a falutation, as forced him to ftagger backward three paces at leaft. If the fecond application had taken effect, in all probability that fpot would have been the boundary of the parfon's mortal peregrination; but, luckily for him, his antagonift was not expert in the management of his weapon, which by a twift of the thong that connected the legs, inftead of pitching upon the head of the astonished curate, descended in an oblique direction on his own pate, with fuch a fwing, that the fkull actually rung like an apothecary's mortar, and ten thoufand lights feemed to dance before his eyes. The curate recollecting himfelf during the refpite he obtained from this accident, and believing his aggreffor to be fome thief who lurked in that place for prey, refolved to make a running fight, until he thould arrive within cry of his habitation. With this defign he raifed up his cudgel for the defence of his head, and, betaking himfelf to his heels, began to roar for help with the lungs of a Stentor. Tunley, throwing away the flail, which he durft no longer truft with the execution of his revenge, purfued the fugitive with all the fpeed he could exert; and the other, either unnerved by fear, or flumbling over a flone, was overtaken before he had run an hundred paces. He no fooner felt the wind of the publican's fift that whiftled round his ears, than he fell flat upon the earth at full length, and the cudgel flew from his unclasping hand; when Tunley, fpringing like a tiger upon his back, rained fuch a fhower of blows upon his carcafs, that he imagined himself under the discipline of ten pair of fists at least; yet the imaginary cuckold, not fatisfied with annoying the prieft in this manner, laid hold on one of his ears with his teeth, and bit fo unmercifully, that the curate was found almost entranced with pain by two labourers, at whole approach the affailant retreated unperceived.

The lieutenant had pofted himfelf at the window, in order to fee the landlord at his firft return; and no fooner perceived him enter the yard, than he called him into the apartment, impatient to learn the effects of their ftratagem. Tunley obeyed the fummons, and appeared before his guefts in all the violence of rage, diforder, and fatigue; his noftrils were dilated more than one half beyond their natural capacity, his eyes rolled, his teeth chattered, he fnored in breathing as if he had been oppreffed by the night-mare, and ftreams of fweat flowed down each fide of his forehead.

Peregrine, affecting to flart at the approach of fuch an uncouth figure, afked if he had been wreftling with a fpirit; upon which he answered, with great vehemence,

" Spirit ! No, no, master, I have had a roll and tumble with the fleft. A dog ! I'll teach him to come a caterwauling about my doors." Gueffing from this reply, that his aim was accomplished, and curious to know the particulars of the rencounter, "Well then (faid the youth), I hope you have prevailed against the flefth, Tunley." Yes, yes (answered the publican), I have cooled his capisfiens, as the faying is : I have played fuch a tune about his ears, that I'll be bound he shan't long for music this month. A goatish ram-faced rascal ! Why, he's a perfect parish bull, as I hope to live."

Hatchway, obferving that he feemed to have made a flout battle, defired he would fit down and recover wind; and after he had fwallowed a brace of bumpers, his vanity prompted him to expatiate upon his own exploit in fuch a manner, that the confederates, without feeming to know the curate was his antagonift, became acquainted with every circumftance of the ambufcade.

Tunley had fcarce got the better of his agitation, when his wife, entering the room, told them by way of news, that fome waggifh body had fent Mr. Sackbut the curate to pray with her. This name inflamed the hufband's choler anew; and, forgetting all his complaifance for his fpoufe, he replied, with a rancorous grin, "Add rabbit him ! I doubt not but you found his admonitions deadly comfortable !" The landlady looking at her vaffal with a fovereign afpect, "What crotchets (faid fhe) have you got in your fool's head, I trow ? I know no bufinefs you have to fit here like a gentleman with your arms akimbo, when there's another company in the houfe to be ferved." The fubmiflive hufband took the hint, and, without further expoftulation, fneaked out of the room.

Next day it was reported, that Mr. Sackbut had been way-laid, and almost murdered by robbers, and an advertifement was pasted upon the church-door, offering a reward to any perfon that should discover the association is but he reaped no fatisfaction from this expedient, and was confined to his chamber a whole fortnight by the bruises he had received.

CHAPTER XXX.

Mr. Sackbut and his pupil confpire againft Peregrine, who, being apprifed of their defign by his fifter, takes meafures for counterworking their fedeme, which is executed by miftake upon Mr. Gauntlet. This young foldier meets with a cordial reception from the commodore, who generoufly decoys him into his own intereft.

WHEN he confidered the circumftances of the ambufcade, he could not perfuade himfelf that he had been affaulted by a common thief, becaufe it was not to be fuppofed that a robber would have amufed himfelf in pommeling rather than in rifling his prey : He therefore aferibed his misfortune to the fecret enmity of fome perfon who had a defign upon his life; and, upon mature deliberation, fixed his fufpicion upon Peregrine, who was the only man on earth from whom he thought he deferved fuch treatment. He communicated his conjecture to his pupil, who readily adopted his opinion, and advifed him firenuoufly to revenge the wrong by a like contrivance, without feeking to make a narrower inquiry, left his enemy fhould be thereby put upon his guard.

This propofal being relifhed, they in concert revolved the means of retorting the ambush with interest, and Aually laid fuch a villanous plan for attacking our hero in the dark, that, had it been executed according to their intention, the young gentleman's fcheme of travelling would have been effectually marred. But their machinations were overheard by Mifs Pickle, who was now in the feventeenth year of her age, and, in fpite of the prejudice of education, entertained in fecret a most fifterly affection for her brother Perry, though the had never fpoke to him, and was deterred by the precepts, vigilance, and menaces of her mother, from attempting any means of meeting him in private. She was not, however, infenfible to his praife, which was loudly founded forth in the neighbourhood, and never failed of going to church, and every other place, where fhe thought fhe might have an opportunity of feeing this amiable brother. With thefe fentiments it cannot be fuppofed that fhe would hear the confpiracy without emotion. She was fhocked at the treacherous barbarity of Gam, and fluddered at the profpect of the danger to which Peregrine would be exposed from their malice. She durft not communicate this plot to her mother, because the was afraid that lady's unaccountable aversion for her first-born would hinder her from interposing in his behalf, and confequently render her a fort of accomplice in the guilt of his affass. She therefore resolved to warn Peregrine of the confpiracy, an account of which the transmitted to him in an affectionate letter, by means of a young gentleman in that neighbourhood, who made his address to her at that time, and who, at her request, offered his fervice to our hero, in defeating the projects of his adversaries.

Peregrine was ftartled when he read the particulars of their fcheme, which was no other than an intention to fally upon him when he fhould be altogether unprovided againft fuch an attack, cut off his ears, and otherwife mutilate him in fuch a manner, that he fhould have no caufe to be vain of his perfon for the future.

Incenfed as he was againft the brutal difpolition of his own father's fon, he could not help being moved at the integrity and tendernefs of his fifter, of whofe inclinations towards him he had been hitherto kept in ignorance. He thanked the gentleman for his honourable dealing, and exprefied a defire of being better acquainted with his virtues; told him, that, now he was cautioned, he hoped there would be no neceflity for giving him any further trouble; and wrote by him a letter of acknowledgment to his fifter, for whom he expreffed the utmoft love and regard, befeeching her to favour him with an interview before his departure, that he might indulge his fraternal fondnefs, and be bleffed with the company and countenance of one at leaft belonging to his own family.

Having imparted this difcovery to his friend Hatchway, they came to a refolution of countermining the plan of their enemies. As they did not choofe to expose themfelves to the infinuations of flander, which would have exerted itfelf at their expence, had they, even in defending themfelves, employed any harfh means of retaliation, they invented a method of difappointing and difgracing their foes, and immediately fet Pipes at work to forward the preparations.

Mifs Pickle having defcribed the fpot which the affaffins had pitched upon for the fcene of their vengeance, our triumvirate intended to have placed a centinel among the corn, who fhould come and give them intelligence when the ambufcade was laid; and, in confequence of that information, they would fteal foftly towards the place, attended by three or four of the domeftics, and draw a large net over the confpirators, who, being entangled in the toil, fhould be difarmed, fettered, heartily fcourged, and fufpended between two trees in the fnare, as a fpectacle to all paffengers that fhould chance to travel that way.

The plan being thus digested, and the commodore made acquainted with the whole affair, the fpy was fent upon duty, and every body within doors prepared to go forth upon the first notice. One whole evening did they fpend in the most impatient expectation ; but, on the fecond, the fcout crept into the garrifon, and affured them, that he had perceived three men skulking behind the hedge, on the road that led to the public houfe, from which Peregrine and the lieutenant used every night to return about that hour. Upon this intelligence, the confederates fet out immediately with all their implements. Approaching the fcene with as little noife as poffible, they heard the found of blows: and, though the night was dark, perceived a fort of tumultuous conflict on the very fpot which the confpirators had poffeffed. Surprifed at this occurrence, the meaning of which he could not comprehend, Peregrine ordered his myrmidons to halt and reconnoitre; and immediately his ears were faluted with an exclamation of "You fhan't 'fcape me, rafcal." The voice being quite familiar to him, he all at once divined the caufe of that confusion which they had observed; and running up to the affiftance of the exclaimer, found a fellow on his knees begging his life of Mr. Gauntlet, who ftood over him with a naked hanger in his hand.

Pickte inftantly made himfelf known to his friend, who told him, that, having left his horfe at Tunley's, he was, in his way to the garrifon, fet upon by three ruffians; one of whom, being the very individual perfon now in his power, had come behind him, and ftruck with a bludgeon at his head, which, however, he miffed, and the inftrument defcended on his left floulder; that, upon drawing his hanger, and laying about him in the dark, the other two fled, leaving their companion, whom he had difabled in the lurch.

Peregrine congratulated him upon his fafety, and having ordered Pipes to fecure the prifoner, conducted Mr. Gauntlet to the garrifon, where he.met with a very hearty reception from the commodore, to whom he was introduced as his nephew's intimate friend; not but that, in all likelihood, he would have abated fomewhat of his hofpitality, had he known that he was the brother of Perry's miftrefs; but her name the old gentleman had never thought of afking, when he inquired into the particulars of his godfon's amour.

The captive being examined, in prefence of Trunnion and all his adherents, touching the ambufcade, owned, that, being in the fervice of Gam Pickle, he had been prevailed upon, by the folicitations of his mafter and the curate, to accompany them in their expedition, and undertake the part which he had acted against the stranger, whom he and his employers miftook for Peregrine. In confideration of this frank acknowledgment, and a fevere wound he had received in his right arm, they refolved to inflict no other punifiment on this malefactor, than to detain him all night in the garrifon, and next morning carry him before a justice of the peace, to whom he repeated all that he had faid over night, and, with his own hand, fubscribed his confession, copies of which were handed about the neighbourhood, to the unfpeakable confusion and difgrace of the curate and his promising pupil.

Meanwhile Trunnion treated the young foldier with uncommon marks of refpect, being prepoffeffed in his favour by this adventure, which he had fo gallantly achieved, as well as by the encomiums that Peregrine beftowed upon his valour and generofity. He liked his countenance, which was bold and hardy, admired his Herculean limbs, and delighted in afking queftions concerning the fervice he had feen.

The day after his arrival, while the conversation turned on this last fubject, the commodore, taking the pipe out of his mouth, "I'll tell you what, brother (faid he), five and forty years ago, when I was third lieutenant of the Warwick man of war, there was a very flout young fellow on board, a fubaltern officer of marines; his name was not unlike your own, d'ye fee, being Guntlet, with a G. I remember he and I could not abide one another at first, because, d'ye fee, I was a failor and he a landman, till we fell in with a Frenchman, whom we engaged for eight glaffes, and at length boarded and took. I was the first man that stood on the enemy's deck, and should have come feurvily off, d'ye fee, if Guntlet had not jumped to my affiftance; but we foon cleared thip, and drove them to clofe quarters, fo that they were obliged to strike; and from that day Guntlet and I were fworn brothers as long as he remained on board. He was exchanged into a marching regiment, and what became of him afterwards, Lord in heaven knows; but this I'll fay of him, whether he be dead or alive, he feared no man that ever wore a head, and was, moreover, a very hearty meffmate."

The ftranger's breaft glowed at this eulogium, which was no fooner pronounced, than he eagerly afked if the French fhip was not the Diligence? The commodore replied with a ftare, "The very fame, my lad." "Then (faid Gauntlet) the perfon of whom you are pleafed to make fuch honourable mention was my own father." "The devil he was! (cried Trunnion, fhaking him by the hand), I am rejoiced to fee a fon of Ned Guntlet in my houfe."

This difcovery introduced a thoufand queftions, in the courfe of which the old gentleman learnt the fituation of his friend's family, and difcharged innumerable execretions upon the ingratitude and injuftice of the miniftry, which had failed to provide for the fon of fuch a brave foldier. Nor was his friendfhip confined to fuch ineffectual exprefiions; he that fame evening fignified to Peregrine a defire of doing fomething for his friend. This inclination was fo much praifed, encouraged, and promoted by his golfon, and even fupported by his counfellor Hatchway, that our hero was empowered to prefent him with a fum of money fufficient to purchafe a commiffion.

Though nothing could be more agreeable to Pickle than this permiftion, he was afraid that Godfrey's ferupulous difposition would hinder him from fubjecting himfelf to any fuch obligation; and therefore proposed that he should be decoyed into his own interest by a feigned story, in confequence of which he would be prevailed upon to accept of the money, as a debt which the commodore had contracted of his father at fea. Trunnion made wry faces at this expedient, the neceffity of which he could not conceive, without calling in question the common sense of Gauntlet, as he took it for granted, that fuch offers as those were not to be rejected on any confideration whatever. Befides, he could not digeft an artifice, by which he himfelf must own that he had lived fo many years, without manifesting the least intention of doing justice to his creditor. All thefe objections, however, were removed by the zeal and rhetoric of Peregrine, who reprefented that it would be impoffible to befriend him on any other terms; that his filence hitherto would be imputed to his want of information, touching the circumstances and condition of his friend; and that his remembering and infifting upon difcharging the obligation, after fuch an interval of time, when the whole affair was in oblivion, would be the greatest compliment he could pay to his own honour and integrity.

Thus perfuaded, he took an opportunity of Gauntlet's being alone with him to broach the affair, telling the young man, that his father had advanced a fum of money for him, when they failed together, on account of the mefs, as well as to ftop the mouth of a clamorous creditor at Portfmouth; and that the faid fum, with intereft, amounted to about four hundred pounds, which he would now, with great thankfulnefs, repay.

Godfrey was amazed at this declaration, and, after a confiderable paufe, replied, that he had never heard his parents mention any fuch debt; that no memorandum or voucher of it was found among his father's papers; and that, in all probability, it muft have been difcharged long ago, although the commodore, in fuch a long courfe of time, and hurry of occupation, might have forgot the repayment: He therefore defired to be excufed from accepting, what, in his own confcience, he believed was not his due; and complimented the old gentleman upon his being fo fcrupuloufly juft and honourable.

The foldier's refufal, which was matter of aftonishment to Trunnion, increased his inclination to affift him; and, on pretence of acquitting his own character, he urged his beneficence with fuch obstinacy, that Gauntlet, afraid of difobliging him, was in a manner compelled to receive a draught for the money, for which he fubscribed an ample difcharge, and immediately transmitted the order to his mother, whom, at the fame time, he informed of the circumstances by which they had fo unexpectedly gained this accession of fortune.

Such a piece of news could not fail of being agreeable to Mrs. Gauntlet, who, by the first post, wrote a polite letter of acknowledgment to the commodore, another to her own fon, importing, that she had already fent the draught to a friend in London, with directions to deposit it in the hands of a certain banker, for the purchase of the first ensigncy to be fold; and she took the liberty of fending a third to Peregrine, couched in very affectionate terms, with a kind postfeript, figned by Miss Sophy and his charming Emilia.

This affair being transacted to the fatisfaction of all concerned, preparations were fet on foot for the departure of our hero, on whom his uncle fettled an annuity of eight hundred pounds, being little lefs than one half of his whole income. By this time indeed the old gentleman could eafily afford to alienate fuch a part of his fortune, because he entertained little or no company, kept few fervants, and was remarkably plain and frugal in his house-keeping; Mrs. Trunnion being now fome years on the wrong fide of fifty, her infirmities began to increase; and though her pride had fuffered no diminution, her vanity was altogether fubdued by her avarice.

A Swiis valet de chambre, who had already made the tour of Europe, was hired for the care of Peregrine's own perfon; Pipes being ignorant of the French language, as well as otherwife unfit for the office of a fafhionable attendant, it was refolved that he fhould remain in garrifon; and his place was immediately fupplied by a Parifian lacquey engaged at London for 'that purpofe. Pipes did not feem to relifh this difpofition of things; and though he made no verbal objections to it, looked remarkably four at his fucceffor upon his firft arrival; but this fullen fit feemed gradually to wear off; and, long before his mafter's departure, he had recovered his natural tranquillity and unconcern.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The two young gentlemen difplay their talents for gallantry, in the courfe of which they are involved in a ludicrous circumftance of diftrefs, and afterwards take vengeance on the author of their mifhap.

MEANWHILE our hero and his new friend, together with honeft Jack Hatchway, made daily excursions into the country, visited the gentlemen in the neighbourhood, and frequently accompanied them to the chafe; all three being exceedingly careffed on account of their talents, which could accommodate themfelves with great facility to the tempers and turns of their entertainers. The lieutenant was a droll in his way, Peregrine poffeffed a great fund of fprightlinefs and good humour, and Godfrey, among his other qualifications, already recited, fung a most excellent fong; fo that the company of this triumvirate was courted in all parties, whether male or female; and if the hearts of our young gentlemen had not been pre-engaged, they would have met with opportunities in abundance of difplaying their address in the art of love; not but that they gave loofe to their gallantry without much interesting their affections, and amufed themselves with little intrigues, which, in the opinion of a man of pleafure, do not affect his fidelity to the acknowledged fovereign of his foul.

In the midft of thefe amufements, our hero received an intimation from his fifter, that fhe fhould be overjoyed to meet him next day, at five o'clock in the afternoon, at the houfe of her nurfe, who lived in a cottage hard by her father's habitation, fhe being debarred from all opportunity of feeing him in any other place by the feverity of her mother, who fuspected her inclination.

He accordingly obeyed the fummons, and went at the time appointed to the place of rendezvous, where he met this affectionate young lady, who, when he entered the room, ran towards him with all the eagerness of transport, flung her arms about his neck, and shed a flood of tears in Vol. 11. M his bofom before the could utter one word, except a repetition of My dear dear brother ! He embraced her with all the piety of fraternal tendernefs, wept over her in his turn, affured her that this was one of the happieft moments of his life, and kindly thanked her for having refifted the example and difobeyed the injunctions of his mother's unnatural averfion.

He was ravifhed to find by her converfation, that the poffefied a great thare of fentibility and prudent reflection; for the lamented the infatuation of her parents with the most filial regret, and expressed fuch abhorrence and concern at the villanous disposition of her younger brother, as a humane fifter may be fuppofed to have entertained. He made her acquainted with all the circumstances of his own fortune; and, as he fuppofed the fpent her time very disagreeably at home, among characters which must be thockingly diffreffing, professed a defire of removing her into fome other fphere, where the could live with more tranquillity and fatisfaction.

She objected to this propofal, as an expedient that would infallibly fubject her to the implacable refentment of her mother, whofe favour and affection fhe at prefent enjoyed but in a very inconfiderable degree; and they had canvaffed divers fchemes of corresponding for the future, when the voice of Mrs. Pickle was heard at the door.

Mifs Julia (that was the young lady's name) finding herfelf betrayed, was feized with a violent agitation of fear, and Peregrine fcarce had time to encourage her with a promife of protection, before the door of the apartment being flung open, this irreconcileable parent rufhed in, and, with a furious afpect, flew directly at her trembling daughter, when the fon interpoling, received the first difcharge of her fury.

Her eyes gleamed with all the rage of indignation, which choked up her utterance, and feemed to convulfe her whole frame; fhe twifted her left hand in his hair, and with the other buffetted him about the face till the blood gufhed from his noftrils and mouth; while he defended his fifter from the cruelty of Gam, who affaulted her from another quarter, feeing his brother engaged. This attack lafted feveral minutes with great violence, till at length Peregrine finding himfelf in danger of being overpowered, if he fhould remain any longer on the defenfive, laid his brother on his back; then he difentangled his mother's hand from his own hair, and having puffed her gently out of the room, bolted the door on the infide; finally, turning to Gam, he threw him out at the window, among a parcel of hogs that fed under it. By this time Julia was almost quite distracted with terror; she knew the had offended beyond all hope of forgivencis, and from that moment confidered herfelf as an exile from her father's houfe. In vain did her brother ftrive to confole her with fresh protestations of love and protection; the counted herfelf extremely miferable in being obliged to endure the eternal refentment of a parent with whom the had hitherto lived, and dreaded the cenfure of the world, which, from her mother's mifreprefentation, the was fenfible would condemn her unheard. That the might not, however, neglect any means in her power of averting this ftorm, the refolved to appeale, if poffible, her mother's wrath with humiliation, and even appeal to the influence of her father, weak as it was, before the would defpair of being forgiven. But the good lady fpared her this unneceffary application, by telling her, through the key-hole, that the must never expect to come within her father's door again; for from that hour the renounced her as unworthy of her affection and regard. Julia, weeping bitterly, endeavoured to foften the rigour of this fentence, by the most fubmiffive and reasonable remonstrances; but as in her vindication fhe of necessity espouled her elder brother's caufe, her endeavours, inftead of foothing, ferved only to exafperate her mother to an higher pitch of indignation, which discharged itself in invectives against Peregrine, whom fhe reviled with the epithets of a worthlefs abandoned reprobate.

The youth, hearing these unjust aspersions, trembled with refertment through every limb, assuring the upbraider that he confidered her as an object of compassion; "for, without all doubt (faid he), your diabolical rancour must be severely punished by the thorns of your own confcience, which this very inftant taxes you with the malice and fallehood of your reproaches. As for my filter, is blocks God that you have not been able to infect her with M ij your unnatural prejudice, which, becaufe fhe is too juft, too virtuous, too humane to imbibe, you reject her as an alien to your blood, and turn her out unprovided into a barbarous world. But even there your vitious purpofe fhall be defeated ; that fame providence that fereened me from the crucity of your hate fhall extend its protection to her, until I shall find it convenient to affert by law that right of maintenance which nature, it feems, hath bestowed upon us in vain. In the mean time, you will enjoy the fatisfaction of paying an undivided attention to that darling fon, whofe amiable qualities have fo long engaged and engroffed your love and esteem."

This freedom of expoftulation exalted his mother's ire to mere frenzy; fhe curfed him with the bittereft imprecations, and raved like a bedlamite at the door, which fhe attempted to burft open. Her efforts were feconded by her favourite fon, who denounced vengeance against Peregrine, made furious affaults againft the lock, which refifted all their applications, until our hero, efpying his friends Gauntlet and Pipes stepping over a stile that stood about a furlong from the window, called them to his affiftance; giving them to understand how he was belieged, he defired they would keep off his mother, that he might the more eafily fecure his fifter Julia's retreat. The young foldier entered accordingly, and, pofting himfelf between Mrs. Pickle and the door, gave the fignal to his friend, who, lifting up his fifter in his arms, carried her fafe without the clutches of this fhe-dragon, while Pipes, with his cudgel, kept young mafter at bay.

The mother being thus deprived of her prey, fprung upon Gauntlet like a lionefs robbed of her whelps, and he muft have fuffered forely in the flefh, had he not prevented her mifchicvous intent by feizing both her wrifts, and fo keeping her at due diftance. In attempting to difengage herfelf from his grafp, fhe ftruggled with fuch exertion, and fuffered fuch agony of paffion at the fame time, that fhe actually fell into a fevere fit, during which fhe was put to bed, and the confederates retired without further moleftation.

In the mean time, Peregrine was not a little perplexed about the difpofal of his fifter whom he had refcued. He could not endure the thoughts of faddling the commodore with a new expence; and he was afraid of undertaking the charge of Julia, without his benefactor's advice and direction; for the prefent, however, he carried her to the houfe of a gentleman in the neighbourhood, whofe lady was her godmother, where fhe was received with great tendernefs and condolence; and he purpofed to inquire for fome creditable houfe, where fhe might be genteelly boarded in his abfence, refolving to maintain her from the favings of his own allowance, which he thought might very well bear fuch deduction. But this intention was frustrated by the publication of the whole affair, which was divulged next day, and foon reached the ears of Trunnion, who chid his godfon for having concealed the adventure; and, with the approbation of his wife, ordered him to bring Julia forthwith to the garrifon. The young gentleman, with tears of gratitude in his eyes, explained his defign of maintaining her at his own expence, and earneftly begged that he might not be deprived of that fatisfaction. But his uncle was deaf to all his entreaties, and infifted upon her living in the garrifon, though for no other reason than that of being company to her aunt, who, he obferved, was loft for want of converfation.

Julia was accordingly brought home, and fettled under the tuition of Mrs. Trunnion, who, whatever face fhe might put on the matter, could have difpenfed with the fociety of her niece; though the was not without hope of gratifying her pique to Mrs. Pickle, by the intelligence the would receive from the daughter of that lady's economy and domeftic behaviour. The mother herfelf feemed confcious of this advantage which her fifter-in-law had now gained over her, being as much chagrined at the news of Julia's reception in the garrifon, as if fhe had heard of her own hufband's death. She even tortured her invention to propagate calumnies against the reputation of her own daughter, whom fhe flandered in all companies; fhe exclaimed against the commodore as an old ruffian, who fpirited up a rebellion among her children, and imputed the hospitality of his wife, in countenancing them, to nothing elfe but her inveterate enmity to their mother, whom they had difobliged. She now infifted, in the moft peremptory terms, upon her hufband's renouncing all M iii commerce with the old lad of the caftle and his adherents; and Mr. Gamaliel, having by this time contracted other friendthips, readily fubnitted to her will, nay, even refuted to communicate with the commodore one night, when they happened to meet by accident at the public houfe.

CHAPTER XXXII.

The commodore ferds a challenge to Gamaliel, and is imposed upon by a waggish invention of the lieutenant, Peregrine, and Gauntiet.

THIS affront Trunnion could by no means digeft : He advifed with the lieutenant upon the fubject ; and the refult of their confultation was a defiance which the old commander fent to Pickle, demanding that he would meet him at fuch a place on horfeback with a brace of piffols, and give fatisfaction for the flight he had put upon him.

Nothing could have afforded more pleafure to Jack than the acceptance of this challenge, which he delivered verbally to Mr. Gamaliel, who was called out from the club at Tunley's for that purpole. The nature of this meffage had an inftantaneous effect upon the conftitution of the pacific Pickle, whole bowels yearned with apprehension, and underwent fuch violent agitation on the fpot, that one would have thought the operation proceeded from fome fevere joke of the apothecary which he had fwallowed in his beer.

The meffenger, defpairing of a fatisfactory anfwer, left him in this woeful condition; and, being loth to lofe any opportunity of raifing the laugh againft the commodore, went immediately and communicated the whole affair to the young gentlemen, entreating them, for the love of God, to concert fome means of bringing old Hannibal into the field. The two friends relified the propofal, and, after fome deliberation, it was refolved that Hatchway fhould tell Trunnion his invitation was accepted by Gamaliel, who would meet him at the place appointed with his fecond, to-morrow in the twilight, becaufe, if either fhould fall, the other would have the better chance for efcaping in the dark; that Godfrey fhould perfonate old Pickle's friend, and Peregrine reprefent his own father, while the lieutenant fhould take care, in loading the piftols, to keep out the fhot, fo that no damage might be done in the rencounter.

These circumstances being adjusted, the lieutenant returned to his principal with a most thundering reply from his antagonift, whofe courageous behaviour, though it could not intimidate, did not fail to aftonish the commodore, who afcribed it to the fpirit of his wife, which had infpired him. Trunnion that inftant defired his counfellor to prepare his cartridge-box, and order the quietest horfe in the ftable to be kept ready faddled for the occafion; his eye feemed to lighten with alacrity and pleafure at the profpect of fmelling gunpowder once more before his death; and when Jack advifed him to make his will, in cafe of accident, he rejected his counfel with difdain, faying, "What! doft think that Hawfer Trunnion, who has flood the fire of fo many floating batteries, runs any rifk from the loufy pops of a landman? Thou shalt fee, thou shalt fee how I shall make him lower his topfails." Next day Peregrine and the foldier provided themfelves with horfes at the public houfe, from whence, at the deftined hour, they rode to the field of battle, each of them being muffled in a great coat, which, with the dimnefs of the light, effectually shielded them from the knowledge of the one-eyed commander, who having taken horfe on pretence of enjoying the fresh air, soon appeared with Hatchway in his rear. When they came within fight of each other, the feconds advanced, in order to divide the ground, and regulate the measures of the combat; when it was determined by mutual confent, that two piftols fhould be difcharged on each fide, and that, if neither fhould prove decifive, recourfe must be had to the broad fwords, in order to afcertain the victory. Thefe articles being fettled, the opponents rode forward to their refpective stations, when Peregrine, cocking his pistol, and prefenting, counterfeited his father's voice, bidding Trunnion take care of his remaining eye. The commodore took his advice, being unwilling to hazard his day-light, and very deliberately oppofed the patched fide of his face to the muzzle of his antagonift's piece, defiring him to do his M iiij duty without further jaw. The young man accordingly fired, and the diftance being finall, the wad of his piftol took place with a fmart ftroke on the forehead of Trunnion, who, miftaking it for a ball, which he thought was lodged in his brain, fpurred up his fteed in a ftate of defperation towards his antagonift, and holding his piece within two yards of his body, let it off, without any regard to the laws of battle. Surprifed and enraged to fee it had made no impression, he hallooed in a terrible tone, " O damn ye, you have got your netting ftuffed, I fee ;" and, advancing, difcharged his fecond piftol fo near his godfon's head, that, had he not been defended by his great coat, the powder must have fcorched his face. Having thus thrown away his fire, he remained at the mercy of Peregrine, who, clapping the piece he had in referve to his head, commanded him to beg his life, and afk pardon for his prefumption. The commodore made no reply to this imperious injunction, but dropping his piftol, and unfheathing his broad fword in an inftant, attacked our hero with fuch incredible agility, that, if he had not made fhift to ward off the flroke with his piece, the adventure, in all likelihood, would have turned out a very tragical joke. Peregrine finding it would be in vain for him to think of drawing his weapon, or of ftanding on the defensive against this furious aggression, very fairly clapped fpurs to his nag, and fought his fafety in flight. Trunnion purfued him with infinite eagernefs, and his fleed being the better of the two, would have overtaken the fugitive to his peril, had he not been unfortunately encountered by the boughs of a tree, that happened to ftand on his blind fide, and incommoded him fo much, that he was fain to quit his fword, and lay hold on the mane, in order to maintain his feat. Perry perceiving his difafter, wheeled about, and now finding leifure to produce his weapon, returned upon his difarmed foe, brandifhing his Ferrara, threatening to make him fhorter by the head, if he would not immediately crave quarter and yield. There was nothing farther from the intention of the old gentleman than fuch fubmiffion, which he flatly refufed to pay, alleging that he had already compelled his enemy to clap on all his fails, and that his own prefent misfortune was owing to accident, all one as if a fhip fhould be attacked, after she had been obliged to heave her guns overboard in a storm.

Before Peregrine had time to anfwer this remonstrance, the lieutenant interposed, and, taking cognizance of the cafe, established a truce, until he and the other second should difcuss and decide upon the merits of the cause. They accordingly retired to a small distance, and, after having conferred a few minutes, Hatchway returned, and pronounced the commodore vanquished by the chance of war.

Never was rage more transported than that which took possession of old Hannibal, when he heard the fentence: It was fome time before he could utter aught, except the reproachful expression, You lie! which he repeated more than twenty times, in a fort of delirious infensibility. When he recovered the further use of speech, he abused the arbitrators with such bitter invectives, renouncing their fentence, and appealing to another trial, that the confederates began to repent of having carried the joke so far; and Peregrine, in order to appeale his choler, owned himself overcome.

This acknowledgment calmed the tumult of his wrath, though he could not for fome days forgive the lieutenant; and the two young gentlemen rode back to Tunley's, while Hatchway, taking the commodore's horfe by the bridle, reconducted him to his manfion, growling all the way to Jack for his unjust and unfriendly decree; though he could not help observing, as how he had made his words good, in making his adverfary ftrike his topfails : "And yet (faid he), before God ! I think the fellow's head is made of a wool-pack; for my fhot rebounded from his face like a wad of fpun-yarn from the fide of a ship. But if so be that fon of a bitch of a tree hadn't come athwart my weather-bow, d'ye fee, I'll be damn'd if I hadn't fnapt his main-yard in the flings, and mayhap let out his bulge-water into the bargain." He feemed particularly vain of this exploit, which dwelt upon his imagination, and was cherifhed as the child of his old age; for though he could not with decency rehearfe it to the young men and his wife at fupper, he gave fhrewd hints of his own manhood, even at these years, and attefted Hatchway as a voucher for his mettle; while the triumvirate, diverted by his vanity, enjoyed in fecret the fuccefs of their impofition.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Peregrine takes his leave of his aunt and fifter; fets out from the garrifon; parts with his uncle and Hatchway on the road, and, with his governor, arrives in fafety at Dover.

THIS, however, was the laft effort of invention which they practifed upon him; and every thing being now prepared for the departure of his godfon, that hopeful youth in two days took leave of all his friends in the neighbourhood. He was closeted two whole hours with his aunt, who enriched him with many pious advices, recapitulated all the benefits which through her means had been conferred upon him fince his infancy, cautioned him against the temptations of lewd women, who bring many a man to a morfel of bread; laid ftrict injunctions upon him to live in the fear of the Lord, and the true Protestant faith, to eschew quarrels and contentions, to treat Mr. Jolter with reverence and regard, and, above all things, to abftain from the beaftly fin of drunkennefs, which expofed a man to the fcorn and contempt of his fellowcreatures, and, by divefting him of reason and reflection, rendered him fit for all manner of vice and debauchery. She recommended to him economy and the care of his health, bade him remember the honour of his family; and, in all the circumftances of his behaviour, affured him, that he might always depend upon the friendflip and generofity of the commodore. Finally, Prefenting him with her own picture fet in gold, and a hundred guineas from her privy purfe, fhe embraced him affectionately, and wifhed him all manner of happinefs and profperity.

Being thus kindly difmified by Mrs. Trunnion, he locked himfelf up with his fifter Julia, whom he admonifhed to cultivate her aunt with the most complaifant and respectful attention, without fleoping to any circumflance of fubmiflion that fle fliould judge unworthy of her practice; he protefted, that his chief ftudy fhould be to make her amends for the privilege fhe had forfeited by her affection for him; entreated her to enter into no engagement without his knowledge and approbation; put into her hand the purfe which he had received from his aunt, to defray her pocket expenses in his abfence, and parted from her, not without tears, after fhe had for fome minutes hung about his neck, killing him, and weeping in the most pathetic filence.

Having performed thefe duties of affection and confanguinity over night, he went to bed, and was, by his own direction, called at four o'clock in the morning, when he found the post-chaife, coach, and riding horses ready at the gate, his friends Gauntlet and Hatchway on foot, the commodore himfelf almost dreffed, and every fervant in the garrifon affembled in the yard to with him a good journey. Our hero fhook each of these humble friends by the hand, tipping them at the fame time with marks of hisbounty; and was very much furprifed when he could not perceive his old attendant Pipes among the number. When he expressed his wonder at this difrespectful omisfion of Tom, fome of those present ran to his chamber, in order to give him a call, but his hammoek and room were both deferted, and they foon returned with an aecount of his having eloped. Peregrine was diffurbed at this information, believing that the fellow had taken fome desperate course in confequence .of his being difmiffed from his fervice, and began to with that he had indulged his inclination, by retaining him ftill about his perfon. However, as there was now no other remedy, he recommended him ftrenuoufly to the particular favour and diftinction of his uncle and Hatehway, in cafe he should appear again; and, as he went out of the gate, was faluted with three cheers by all the domefties in the family. The commodore, Gauntlet, lieutenant, Peregrine, and Jolter, went into the coach together, that they might enjoy each other's conversation as much as possible, refolving to breakfast at an inn upon the road, where Trunnion and Hatchway intended to bid our adventurer farewell; the valet de chambre got into the post-chaife, the French lacquey rode one horfe, and led another, one of the valets of the garrifon mounted at the back of the coach, and thus the cavalcade fet out on the road to Dover. As the commodore could not bear the fatigue of jolting, they travelled at an eafy pace during the first stage, fo that the old gentleman had an opportunity of communicating his exhortations to his godion, with regard to his conduct abroad; he advifed him, now that he was going into foreign parts, to be upon his guard against the fair weather of the French politeffe, which was no more to be trufted than a whirlpool at fea. He observed that many young men had gone to Paris with good cargoes of fenfe, and returned with a great deal of canvafs, and no ballaft at all, whereby they became crank all the days of their lives, and fometimes carried their keels above water. He defired Mr. Jolter to keep his pupil out of the clutches of those sharking priests, who lie in wait to make converts of all young ftrangers; and, in a particular manner, cautioned the youth against carnal conversation with the Parifian dames, who, he understood, were no better than gaudy firefhips, ready primed with death and deftruction.

Peregrine liftened with great refpect, thanking him for his kind admonitions, which he faithfully promiled to obferve. They halted and breakfasted at the end of the ftage, where Jolter provided himfelf with a horfe, and the commodore fettled the method of corresponding with his nephew. The minute of parting being arrived, the old commander wrung his godfon by the hand, faying, " I with thee a profperous voyage and good cheer, my lad; my timbers are now a little crazy, d'ye fee; and God knows if I shall keep afloat till such time as I fee thee again; but howfomever, hap what will, thou wilt find thyfelf in a condition to keep in the line with the best of thy fellows." He then reminded Gauntlet of his promife to call at the garrifon in his return from Dover, and imparted fomething in a whifper to the governor, while Jack Hatchway, unable to fpeak, pulled his hat over his eyes, and, fqueezing Peregrine by the hand, gave him an iron piftol of curious workmanship, as a memorial of his friendship. Our youth, who was not unmoved on this occasion, received the pledge, which he acknowledged with the prefent of a filver tobacco-box, bought for that purpose; and the two lads of the caffle getting into the coach, were driven homewards in a ftate of filent dejection.

Godfrey and Peregrine feated themfelves in the poftchaife, and Jolter, the valet de chambre, and lacquey, beftriding their beafts, they proceeded for the place of their deftination, at which they arrived in fafety that fame night, and befpoke a paffage in the packet-boat, which was to fail next day.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

He adjusts the method of his correspondence with Gauntlet; meets by accident with an Italian charlatan, and a certain apothecary, who proves to be a noted character.

THERE the two friends adjusted the articles of their future correspondence; and Peregrine having written a letter to his mistres, wherein he renewed his former vows of eternal fidelity, it was intrusted to the care of her brother; while Mr. Jolter, at the defire of his pupil, provided an elegant supper, and some excellent Burgundy, that they might spend this eve of his departure with the greater enjoyment.

Things being thus disposed, and a fervant employed in laying the cloth, their ears were of a fudden invaded by a strange tumultuous noife in the next room, occasioned by the overthrow of tables, chairs, and glaffes, with odd unintelligible exclamations in broken French, and a jargon of threats in the Welch dialect. Our young gentlemen ran immediately into the apartment from whence this clamour feemed to proceed, and found a thin meagre fwarthy figure, gasping in all the agony of fear, under the hands of a fquat, thick, hard-featured man, who collared him with great demonstrations of wrath, faying, " If you was as mighty a magician as Owen Glendower, or the witch of Entor, look you, ay, or as Paul Beor himfelf, I will meke pold, by the affiftance of Got, and in his Majesty's naam, to feize and fecure, and confine and confront you, until fuch time as you fuffer and endure and undergo the pains and penalties of the law, for your diabolical practices. Shentlements (added he, turning to our adventurers), I take you to witnefs that I proteft and affert and avow, that this perfon is as pig a necromancer as you would defire to behold; and I fupplicate and befeech and entreat of you, that he may be prought pefore his petters, and compelled to give an account of his compact and commerce with the imps of darknefs, look you; for as I am a Chriftian foul, and hope for joyful refurrection, I have this pleffed evening feen him perform fuch things as could not be done without the aid and inftruction and connivance of the tevil."

Gauntlet feemed to enter into the fentiments of this Welch reformer, and actually laid hold on the delinquent's fhoulder, crying, " Damn the rafcal! I'll lay any wager that he's a Jefuit, for none of his order travel without a familiar." But Peregrine, who looked upon the affair in another point of view, interpofed in behalf of the ftranger, whom he freed from his aggreffors, obferving that there was no occasion to use violence, and asked in French what he had done to incur the cenfure of the informer. The poor foreigner, more dead than alive, anfwered that he was an Italian charlatan, who had practifed with fome reputation in Padua, until he had the misfortune to attract the notice of the Inquifition, by exhibiting certain wonderful performances by his skill in natural knowledge, which that tribunal confidered as the effects of forcery, and perfecuted him accordingly; fo that he had been fain to make a precipitate retreat into France, where not finding his account in his talents, he was now arrived in England, with a view of practifing his art in London; and that, in confequence of a fpecimen which he had given to a company below, the choleric gentleman had followed him up ftairs to his own apartment, and affaulted him in that inholpitable manner. He therefore earneftly begged that our hero would take him under his protection; and if he entertained the least fuspicion of his employing preternatural means in the operations of his art, he would freely communicate all the fecrets in his pofferfion.

The youth difpelled his apprehenfion, by affuring him that he was in no danger of fuffering for his art in England, where, if ever he fhould be queftioned by the zeal of fuperflitious individuals, he had nothing to do but appeal to the next juffice of the peace, who would immediately quit him of the charge, and punifh his accufers for their impertinence and indiference.

He then told Gauntlet and the Welchman that the ftranger had a good action against them for an affault, by virtue of an act of parliament, which makes it criminal for any perfon to accufe another of forcery and witchcraft, thefe idle notions being now justly exploded by all fensible men. Mr. Jolter, who had by this time joined the company, could not help fignifying his diffent from this opinion of his pupil, which he endeavoured to invalidate by the authority of Scripture, quotations from the fathers, and the confession of many wretches who fuffered death for having carried on correspondence with evil fpirits, together with the evidence of Satan's Invisible World, and Moreton's History of Witchcraft.

The foldier corroborated thefe testimonies by facts that had happened within the fphere of his own knowledge; and, in particular, mentioned the cafe of an old woman in the parish in which he was born, who used to transform herfelf into the fhapes of fundry animals, and was at laft killed by fmall fhot in the character of a hare. The Welchman thus fupported, expressed his furprise at hearing that the legiflature had flown fuch tendernefs for criminals of fo dark a hue; and offered to prove, by undeniable inftances, that there was not a mountain in Wales which had not been in his memory the fcene of necromancy and witchcraft : " Wherefore (faid he), I am affuredly more than apove aftonished and confounded and concerned, that the parliament of Great Pritain fhould in their great wifdoms, and their prudence, and their penetration, give countenance and encouragement, look you, to the works of darkness and the empire of Pelzepup; ofer and apove the evidence of holy writ, and those writers who have been quoted by that aggurate and learned fhentleman, we are informed by profane hiftory, of the pribbles, and pranks of the old ferpent, in the bortents and oragles of antiquity; as you will find in that most excellent historian Bolypius, and Titus Lifius; ay, and moreofer, in the Commentaries of Julius Cæfar himfelf, who, as the ole world knows, was a most famous, and a most failant, and a most wife, and a most prudent, and a most fortunate chiftan, and a most renowned orator; ay, and a most elegant writer to boot."

Peregrine did not think proper to enter the lifts of difpute with three fuch obstinate antagonists; but contented himfelf with faying, that he believed it would be no difficult matter to impugn the arguments they had advanced, though he did not find himfelf at all dilpofed to undertake the tafk, which must of course break in upon the evening's entertainment. He therefore invited the Italian to fupper, and afked the fame favour of his accufer, who feemed to have fomething curious and characteriftic in his manner and difpolition, refolving to make himfelf an eye-witnefs of those furprising feats, which had given offence to the choleric Briton. This fcrupulous gentleman thanked our hero for his courtefy, but declined communicating with the ftranger, until his character fhould be further explained; upon which his inviter, after fome conversation with the charlatan, assuring him that he would himfelf undertake for the innocence of his art; and then he was prevailed upon to favour them with his company.

In the courfe of the conversation, Peregrine learnt that the Welchman was a furgeon of Canterbury, who had been called into a confultation at Dover, and, understanding that his name was Morgan, took the liberty of afking if he was not the perfon fo refpectfully mentioned in the Adventures of Roderick Random. Mr. Morgan affumed a look of gravity and importance at this interrogation, and, fcrewing up his mouth, anfwered, " Mr. Rantum, my goot Sir, I believe upon my confcience and falfation, is my very goot frient and wellwisher; and he and I have been companions, and meffinates, and fellow-fufferers, look you; but neverthelefs, for all that, peradventure he hath not rehaved with fo much complaifance and affability, and refpect, as I might have expected from him; pecaufe he hath revealed, and tivulged, and published our private affairs, without my knowledge, and privity, and confent; but as Got is my Saviour, I think he had no evil intention in his pelly : and though there be certain perfons, look you, who, as I am told, take upon them to laugh at his defcriptions of my perfon, deportment, and converfation, I do affirm and maintain, and infift with my heart, and my ploot, and my foul, that those perfons are no petter than ignorant affes, and that they know not how to difcern, and diftinguish, and define true ridicule, or, as Aristotle calls it, the to geloion, no more, look you, than a herd of mountain goats; for I will make pold to obferve, and I hope this goot company will be of the fame opinion, that there is nothing faid of me in that performance which is unworthy of a Christian and a shentleman."

Our young gentleman and his friends aquiefced in the justnefs of his observation. Peregrine particularly affur-ed him, that, from reading the book, he had conceived the utmost regard and veneration for his character; and that he thought himfelf extremely fortunate in having this opportunity of onjoying his conversation. Morgan, not a little proud of fuch advances from a perfon of Peregrine's appearance, returned the compliment with a profusion of civility, and, in the warmth of acknowledgement, expressed a defire of feeing him and his company at his house in Canterbury : " I will not pretend or prefume, kind Sir (faid he), to entertain you according to your merits and deferts; but you shall be as welcome to my poor cottage, and my wife and family, as the Prince of Wales himfelf; and it shall go hard, if, one way or other, I do not find ways and means of making you confefs that there is fome goot fellowship in an ancient Priton : For though I am no petter than a fimple apothecary, I have as goot plood circulating in my veins as any he in the country (and I can defcribe, and delineate, and demonstrate my pedigree to the fatisfaction of the 'ole 'orld ; and moreofer, by Got's goot providence and affiftance, I can afford to treat my friend with a joint of goot mutton, and a pottle of excellent wine, and no tradefman can peard me with a bill." He was congratulated on his happy fituation, and affured that our youth would visit him on his return from France, provided he fhould take Canterbury on his route. As Peregrine manifested an inclination of being acquainted with the state of his affairs, he very complaifantly fatisfied his curiofity, by giving him to know, that his fpouse had left off breeding, after having bleffed him with two boys and a girl, who were still alive and well; that he lived in good Vol. II. N efteem with his neighbours, and by his practice, which was confiderably extended immediately after the publication of Roderick Random, had faved fome thoufand pounds. He had begun to think of retiring among his own relations in Glamorganshire, though his wife had made objections to this propofal, and oppofed the execution of it with fuch obstinacy, that he had been at infinite pains in afferting his own prerogative, by convincing her, both from reafon and example, that he was king and prieft in his own family, and that the owed the most implicit fubmission to his will. He likewise informed the company, that he had lately feen his friend Roderick, who had come from London on purpofe to vifit him, after having gained his law-fuit with Mr. Tophall, who was obliged to pay Narciffa's fortune; that Mr. Random, in all appearance, led a very happy life in the converfation of his father and bed-fellow, by whom he enjoyed a fon and daughter; and that Morgan had received, in a prefent from him, a piece of very fine linen of his wife's own making, feveral kits of falmon, and two cafks of pickled pork, the most delicate he had ever tafted, together with a barrel of excellent herrings for falmagundy, which he know to be his favourite difh.

This topic of converfation being difcuffed, the Italian was defired to exhibit a fpecimen of his art, and in a few minutes conducted the company into the next room, where, to their great aftonishment and affright, they beheld a thoufand ferpents winding along the cieling. Morgan, ftruck with this phenomenon, which he had not feen before, began to utter exorcifms with great devotion, Mr. Jolter ran terrified out of the room, Gauntlet drew his hanger, and Peregrine himfelf was difconcerted. The operator perceiving their confusion, defired them to retire, and calling them back in an inftant, there was not a viper to be feen. He raifed their admiration by fundry other performances, and the Welchman's former opinion and abhorrence of his character began to recur, when, in confideration of the civility with which he had been treated, this Italian imparted to them all the methods by which he had acted fuch wonders, that were no other than the effects of natural caufes curioufly combined; fo that Morgan became a convert to his skill, asked pardon for the fufpicion he had entertained, and invited the ftranger to pafs a few days with him at Canterbury. 'The fcruples of Godfrey and Jolter were removed at the fame time, and Peregrine teftified his approbation by a handfome gratuity which he beftowed upon their entertainer.

The evening being fpent in this fociable manner, every man retired to his refpective chamber, and next morning they breakfasted together, when Morgan declared he would ftay till he should fee our hero fairly embarked, that he might have the pleafure of Mr. Gauntlet's company to his own habitation : Meanwhile, by the fkipper's advice, the fervants were ordered to carry a ftore of wine and provision on board, in case of accident; and as the packet-boat could not fail before one o'clock, the company walked up hill to vifit the caftle, where they faw the fword of Julius Cæfar, and Queen Elizabeth's pocketpiftol, repeated Shakespeare's description, while they furveyed the chalky cliffs on each fide, and caft their eyes towards the city of Calais, that was obscured by a thick cloud, which did not much regale their eye-fight, becaufe it feemed to portend foul weather.

Having viewed every thing remarkable in this place, they returned to the pier, where, after the compliments of parting, and an affectionate embrace between the two young gentlemen, Peregrine and his governor ftepped aboard, the fails were hoifted, and they went to fea with a fair wind, while Godfrey, Morgan, and the conjurer walked back to the inn, from whence they fet out for Canterbury, before dinner.

CHAPTER XXXV.

He embarks for France; is overtaken by a ftorm; is furprifed with the appearance of Pipes; lands at Calais, and has an affray with the officers of the cuftomhous.

SCARCE had the veffel proceeded two leagues on the paffage, when the wind fhifting, blew directly in their teeth; fo that they were obliged to haul upon a wind, and alter their courfe. The fea running pretty high at the fame time, our hero, who was below in his cabin, began to be fqueamifh, and, in confequence of the fkipper's advice, went upon the deck for the comfort of his ftomach; while the governor, experienced in thefe difafters, flipt into bed, where he lay at his eafe, amufing himfelf with a treatife on the cycloid, with algebraical demonstrations, which never failed to engage his imagination in the most agreeable manner.

In the mean time the wind increased to a very hard gale, the veffel pitched with great violence, the fea wafhed over the decks, the mafter was alarmed, the erew were confounded, the paffengers were overwhelmed with ficknefs and fear, and univerfal diffraction enfued. In the midft of this uproar, Peregrine holding faft by the taffrill, and looking ruefully ahead, the countenance of Pipes prefented itfelf to his aftonished view, rising as it were from the hold of the fhip. At first he imagined it was a fearformed shadow of his own brain, though he did not remain long in this terror, but plainly perceived that it was no other than the real perfon of Thomas, who, jumping on the quarter deck, took charge of the helm, and dictated to the failors with as much authority as if he had been commander of the ship. The skipper looked upon him as an angel fent to his affiftance, and the crew foon difcovering him to be a thorough-bred feaman, notwithftanding his livery frock, obeyed his orders with fuch alacrity, that in a little time the confusion vanished, and every neceffary ftep was taken to weather the gale.

Our young gentleman immediately conceived the meaning of Tom's appearance on board, and, when the tumult was a little fubfided, went up, and encouraged him to exert himfelf for the prefervation of the fhip, promifing to take him again into his fervice, from which he thould never be difiniffed, except at his own defire. This affurance had a furprifing effect upon Pipes, who, though he made no manner of reply, thruft the helm into the mafter's hand, faying, "Here, you old bum-boat woman, take hold of the tiller, and keep her thus, boy, thus;" and fkipped about the veffel, trimming the fails, and managed the ropes with fuch agility and fkill, that every body on deck ftood amazed at his dexterity.

Mr. Jolter was far from being unconcerned at the uncommon motion of the veffel, the finging of the wind, and the uproar which he heard above him; he looked towards the cabin door with the most fearful expectation, in hope of feeing fome perfon who could give fome account of the weather, and what was doing upon deck; but not a foul appeared, and he was too well acquainted with the difpolition of his own bowels to make the leaft alteration in his attitude. When he had lain a good while in all the agony of fuspense, the boy tumbled headlong into his apartment with fuch noife, that he believed the maft had gone by the board, and ftarting upright in his bed, afked, with all the fymptoms of horror, what was the caufe of that diffurbance? The boy, half ftunned by his fall, answered in a dolorous tone, "I'm come to put up the dead-lights." At the mention of dead-lights, the meaning of which he did not understand, the poor governor's heart died within him, and he fhivered with despair. His recollection forfaking him, he fell upon his knees in the bed, and fixing his eyes upon the book which was in his hand, began to pronounce aloud with great fervour, " The time of a complete ofcillation in the cycloid, is to the time in which a body would fall through the axis of the cycloid DV. as the circumference of a circle to its diameter." He would in all likelihood have proceeded with the demonstration of this proposition, had he not been feized with fuch a qualm, as compelled him to drop the book, and accommodate himfelf to the emergency of his diftemper; he therefore ftretched himfelf at full length, and, putting up ejaculations to Heaven, began to prepare himfelf for his latter end, when all of a fudden the noife above was intermitted; and, as he could not conceive the caufe of this tremendous filence, he imagined that either the men were washed overboard, or that, defpairing of fafety, they had ceafed to oppofe the tempest. While he was harrowed by this miferable uncertainty, which, however, was not altogether unenlightened by fome fcattered rays of hope, the mafter entered the cabin; then he asked, with a voice half extinguished by fear, how matters went upon deck? and the fkipper, with a large bottle of brandy applied to his mouth, anfwered in a hollow tone, " All's over now, master." Upon which, Mr. Jolter, giving himfelf over for loft, exclaimed with the utmost horror, "Lord have mercy upon us! Chrift have mercy upon us!" and repeated this fupplication as it were mechanically, until the master undeceived him, by explaining the meaning of what he had faid, and affuring him that the fquall was over.

Such a fudden transition from fear to joy occasioned a violent agitation both in his mind and body; and it was a full quarter of an hour before he recovered the right use of his organs. By this time the weather cleared up, the wind began to blow again from the right corner, and the spires of Calais appeared at the distance of five leagues; fo that the countenances of all on board were lighted up with joyous expectation; and Peregrine, venturing to go down into the cabin, comforted his governor with an account of the happy turn of their affairs.

Jolter, transported with the thoughts of a fpeedy landing, began to launch out in praife of that country for which they were bound. He obferved, that France was the land of politenefs and hofpitality, which were confpicuous in the behaviour of all ranks and degrees, from the peer to the peafant; that a gentleman and a foreigner, far from being infulted and impofed upon by the lower clafs of people, as in England, was treated with the utmoft reverence, candour, and refpect; that their fields were fertile, their climate pure and healthy, their farmers rich and induftrious, and the fubjects in general the happicft of men. He would have profecuted this favourite theme ftill farther, had not his pupil been obliged to run upon deck, in confequence of certain warnings he received from his ftomach.

The fkipper feeing his condition, very honeftly reminded him of the cold ham and fowls, with a bafket of wine, which he had ordered to be fent on board, and afked if he would have the cloth laid below. He could not have chofen a more feafonable opportunity of manifefting his own difintereftednefs. Peregrine made wry faces at the mention of food, bidding him (for Chrift's fake) talk no more on that fubject. He then defeended into the cabin, and put the fame queftion to Mr. Jolter, who, he knew, entertained the fame abhorrence for his propofal; and, meeting with the like reception from him, went between decks, and repeated his courteous proffer to the valet de chambre and lacquey, who lay fprawling in all the pangs of a double evacuation, and rejected his civility with the most horrible loathing. Thus baffled in all his kind endeavours, he ordered his boy to fecure the provision in one of his own lockers, according to the custom of the ship.

It being low water when they arrived on the French coaft, the veffel could not enter the harbour, and they were obliged to bring to, and wait for a boat, which in less than half an hour came along-fide from the shore. Mr. Jolter now came upon deck, and fnuffing up the French air with fymptoms of infinite fatisfaction, afked of the boatmen (with the friendly appellation of Mes enfans) what they demanded for transporting him and his pupil, with their baggage, to the pier. But how was he difconcerted, when those polite, candid, reasonable watermen, demanded a Louis d'Or for that fervice ! Peregrine, with a farcaftic fneer, obferved, that he already began to perceive the justice of his encomiums on the French; and the difappointed governor could fay nothing in his own vindication, but that they were debauched by their intercourfe with the inhabitants of Dover. His pupil, however, was fo much offended at their extortion, that he abfolutely refufed to employ them, even when they abated one half in their demand, and fwore he would ftay on board till the packet fhould be able to enter the harbour, rather than encourage fuch imposition.

The mafter, who, in all probability, had fome fort of fellow-feeling with the boatmen, in vain reprefented, that he could not with fafety lie to, or anchor upon a leefhore; our hero having confulted Pipes, anfwered, that he had hired his veffel to transport him to Calais, and that he would oblige him to perform what he had undertaken.

The fkipper, very much mortified at this peremptory reply, which was not over and above agreeable to Mr. Jolter, difmiffed the boat, notwithftanding the folicitations and condefcenfion of the watermen. Running a little farther in fhore, they came to an anchor, and waited till there was water enough to float them over the bar. Then they flood into the harbour, and our gentleman, with his attendants and baggage, were landed on the pier by the failors, whom he liberally rewarded for their trouble.

He was immediately plied by a great number of porters, who, like fo many hungry wolves, laid hold on his luggage, and began to carry it off piecemeal, without his order or direction. Incenfed at this officious infolence, he commanded them to defift, with many oaths and opprobrious terms that his anger fuggefted; and, perceiving that one of them did not feem to pay any regard to what he faid, but marched off with his burden, he fnatched a cudgel out of his lacquey's hand, and, overtaking the fellow in a twinkling, brought him to the ground with one blow. He was inftantly furrounded by the whole congregation of this canaille, who refented the injury which their brother had fuftained, and would have taken immediate fatisfaction of the aggreffor, had not Pipes, feeing his mafter involved, brought the whole crew to his affiftance, and exerted himfelf fo manfully, that the enemy were obliged to retreat with many marks of defeat, and menaces of interesting the commandant in their quarrel. Jolter, who knew and dreaded the power of the French governor, began to fhake with apprehension, when he heard their repeated threats; but they durft not apply to this magistrate, who, upon a fair representation of the cafe, would have punished them feverely for their rapacious and infolent behaviour. Peregrine, without further molestation, availed himfelf of his own attendants, who fhouldered his baggage, and followed him to the gate, where they were stopped by the centinels, until their names should be regiftered.

Mr. Jolter, who had undergone this examination before, refolved to profit by his experience, and cunningly reprefented his pupil as a young English lord. This intimation, supported by the appearance of his equipage, was no sooner communicated to the officer, than he turned out the guard, and ordered his foldiers to reft upon their arms, while his lordship passed in great state to the Lion d'Argent, where he took up his lodgings for the night, refolving to fet out for Paris next morning in a post-chaife.

The governor triumphed greatly in this piece of complaifance and refpect with which they had been honoured, and refumed his beloved topic of difcourfe, in applauding the method and fubordination of the French government, which was better calculated for maintaining order, and protecting the people, than any conflictution upon earth. Of their courteous attention to ftrangers, there needed no other proof than the compliment which had been paid to them, together with the governor's connivance at Peregrine's employing his own fervants in carrying the baggage to the inn, contrary to the privilege of the inhabitants.

While he expatiated with a remarkable degree of felfindulgence on this fubject, the valet de chambre coming into the room, interrupted his harangue, by telling his mafter that their trunks and portmanteaus must be carried to the customhouse, in order to be fearched, and fealed with lead, which must remain untouched until their arrival at Paris.

Peregrine made no objection to this practice, which was in itfelf reafonable enough; but when he underftood that the gate was belieged by another multitude of porters, who infifted upon their right of carrying the goods, and alfo of fixing their own price, he abfolutely refufed to comply with their demand. Nay, he chaftifed fome of the most clamorous among them with his foot, and told them, that if their customhouse officers had a mind to examine his baggage, they might come to the inn for that purpofe. The valet de chambre was abashed at this boldnefs of his mafter's behaviour, which, the lacquey, fhrugging up his fhoulders, obferved, was bien a l'Angloife; while the governor reprefented it as an indignity to the whole nation, and endeavoured to perfuade his pupil to comply with the cuftom of the place. But Peregrine's natural haughtinefs of difpolition hindered him from giving ear to Jolter's wholefome advice; and, in lefs than half an hour, they observed a file of musketeers marching up to the gate. At fight of this detachment the tutor trembled. the valet grew pale, and the lacquey croffed himfelf; but our hero, without exhibiting any other fymptoms than those of indignation, met them on the threshold, and, with a ferocious air, demanded their bufinefs. The corporal, who commanded the file, answered with great deliberation, that he had orders to convey his baggage to the cuftomhouse; and seeing the trunks standing in the entry, placed his men between them and the owner, while the porters that followed took them up, and proceeded to the Douane without opposition.

Pickle was not mad enough to difpute the authority of this meffage; but, in order to gall, and fpecify his contempt for thofe who brought it, he called aloud to his valet, defiring him, in French, to accompany his things, and fee that none of his linens and effects fhould be ftolen by the fearchers. The corporal, mortified at this fatirical infinuation, darted a look of refentment at the author, as if he had been interefted for the glory of his nation, and told him, that he could perceive he was a ftranger in France, or elfe he would have faved himfelf the trouble of fuch a needlefs precaution.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

He makes a fruitlefs attempt in gallantry; departs for Boulogne, where he fpends the evening with certain English exiles.

HAVING thus yielded to the hand of power, he inquired if there was any other Englifh company in the houfe; when, understanding that a gentleman and lady lodged in the next apartment, and had befpoke a post-chaife for Paris, he ordered Pipes to ingratiate himself with their footman, and, if possible, learn their names and condition, while he and Mr. Jolter, attended by the lacquey, took a turn round the ramparts, and viewed the particulars of the fortification.

Tom was fo very fuccefsful in his inquiry, that when his mafter returned, he was able to give him a fatisfactory account of his fellow-lodgers, in confequence of having treated his brother with a bottle of wine. The people in queftion were a gentleman and his lady lately arrived from England, in their way to Paris. The hufband was a man of good fortune, who had been a libertine in his youth; and a profeffed declaimer againft matrimony. He wanted neither fenfe nor experience, and piqued himfelf in particular upon his art of avoiding the fnares of the female fex, in which he pretended to be deeply verfed. But, notwithftanding all his caution and fkill, he had lately fallen a facrifice to the attractions of an oyfter wench, who had found means to decoy him into the bands of wedlock; and, in order to evade the compliments and congratulations of his friends and acquaintance, he had come fo far on a tour to Paris, where he intended to initiate his fpoufe in the beau monde. In the mean time he chofe to live upon the referve, becaufe her natural talents had as yet received but little cultivation; and he had not the most implicit confidence in her virtue and differentiate, which, it feems, had like to have yielded to the addreffes of an officer at Canterbury, who had made fhift to infinuate himfelf into her acquaintance and favour.

Peregrine's curiofity being inflamed by this information, he lounged about the yard, in hopes of feeing the dulcinea who had captivated the old bachelor; and at length, obferving her at a window, took the liberty of bowing to her with great refpect. She returned the compliment with a curtfey, and appeared fo decent in her drefs and manner, that, unlefs he had been previoufly informed of her former life and conversation, he never would have dreamed that her education was different from that of other ladies of fashion; fo cafy is it to acquire that external deportment on which people of condition value themfelves fo much. Not but that Mr. Pickle pretended to diffinguish a certain vulgar audacity in her countenance, which, in a lady of birth and fortune, would have paffed for an agreeable vivacity that enlivens the afpect, and gives poignancy to every feature; but as fhe poffeffed a pair of fine eyes, and a clear complexion overfpread with the glow of health, which never fails of recommending the owner, he could not help gazing at her with defire, and forming the defign of making a conquest of her heart. With this view, he fent his compliments to her hufband, whofe name was Hornbeck, with an intimation, that he propofed to fet out next day for Paris, and as he underftood that he was refolved upon the fame journey, he fhould be extremely glad of his company on the road, if he was not better engaged. Hornbeck, who in all probability did not choose to accommodate his wife with a fquire of our hero's appearance, fent a civil answer to his meffage, profeffing infinite mortification at his being unable to embrace the favour of this kind offer, by reafon of the indifpolition of his wife, who, he was afraid, would not be in a condition for fome days to bear the fatigue of travelling. This rebuff, which Peregrine afcribed to the hufband's jealoufy, ftifled his project in embryo; he ordered his French fervant to take a place for himfelf in the diligence, where all his luggage was flowed, except a fmall trunk with fome linen and other neceffaries, that was fixed upon the post-chaife which they hired of the landlord; and early next morning he and Mr. Jolter departed from Calais, attended by his valet de chambre and Pipes on horfeback. They proceeded without any accident as far as Boulogne, where they breakfasted, and vifited old Father Graham, a Scottifh gentleman of the governor's acquaintance, who had lived as a capuchin in that place for the fpace of threefcore years, and during that period conformed to all the aufterities of the order with the most rigorous exactness; being equally remarkable for the franknefs of his converfation, the humanity . of his disposition, and the simplicity of his manners. From Boulogne they took their departure about noon, and, as they proposed to fleep that night at Abbeville, commanded the poftillion to drive with extraordinary speed. Perhaps it was well for his cattle that the axletree gave way, and the chaife of courfe overturned, before they had travelled one-third part of the stage.

This accident compelled them to return to the place from whence they had fet out, and as they could not procure another convenience, they found themfelves under the neceffity of ftaying till their chaife could be refitted. Understanding that this operation would detain them a whole day, our young gentleman had recourfe to his patience, and demanded to know what they would have for dinner; the garçon or waiter thus questioned, vanished in a moment, and immediately they were furprifed with the appearance of a ftrange figure, which, from the extravagance of its drefs and gesticulation, Peregrine miftook for a madman of the growth of France. This phantom (which, by the by, happened to be no other than the cook, was a tall, long-legged, meagre, fwarthy fellow, that flooped very much; his cheek-bones were remarkably raifed, his nofe bent into the shape and fize of a powder-horn, and the fockets of his eyes as raw round the edges, as if the skin had been pared off. On his head he wore an handkerchief, which had once been white, and now ferved to cover the upper part of a black periwig, to which was attached a bag, at least a foot fquare, with a folitaire and rofe that fluck up on each fide to his ear; fo that he looked like a criminal on the His back was accommodated with a linen waiftpillory. coat, his hands adorned with long ruffles of the fame piece, his middle was girded by an apron tucked up, that it might not conceal his white filk flockings rolled; and at his entrance he brandifhed a bloody weapon full three feet in length. Peregrine, when he first faw him approach in this menacing attitude, put himfelf upon his guard; but, being informed of his quality, perused his bill of fare, and having befpoke three or four things for dinner, walked out with Mr. Jolter to view both towns, which they had not leifure to confider minutely before. In their return from the harbour, they met with four or five gentlemen, all of whom feemed to look with an air of dejection, and, perceiving our hero and his governor to be English by their drefs, bowed with great respect as they passed. Pickle, who was naturally compassionate, felt an emotion of fympathy; and feeing a perfon, who by his habit he judged to be one of their fervants, accosted him in English, and asked who the gentlemen were. The lacquey gave him to underftand that they were his own countrymen, exiled from their native homes, in confequence of their adherence to an unfortunate and ruined caufe; and that they were gone to the fea fide, according to their daily practice, in order to indulge their longing eyes with a profpect of the white cliffs of Albion, which they must never more approach.

Though our young gentleman differed widely from them in point of political principles, he was not one of those enthusiafts who look upon every schifm from the established articles of faith as damnable, and exclude the sceptic from every benefit of humanity and Christian forgivenes: He could easily comprehend how a man of the most unblemissed morals might, by the prejudice of education, or indispensable attachments, be engaged in such a blame-worthy and pernicious undertaking; and thought that they had already suffered feverely for their imprudence. He was affected with the account of their diurnal pilgrimage to the fea fide, which he confidered as a pathetic proof of their affliction, and invefted Mr. Jolter with the agreeable office of going to them with a compliment in his name, and begging the honour of drinking a glafs with them in the evening. They accepted the propofal with great fatisfaction and refpectful acknowledgment, and in the afternoon waited upon the kind inviter, who treated them with coffee, and would have detained them to fupper; but they entreated the favour of his company at the houfe which they frequented, fo earneftly, that he yielded to their folicitations, and with his governor was conducted by them to the place, where they had provided an elegant repaft, and regaled them with fome of the beft claret in France.

It was eafy for them to perceive that their principal guest was no favourer of their state maxims, and therefore they industriously avoided every subject of conversation which could give the leaft offence; not but that they lamented their own fituation, which cut them off from all their dearest connections, and doomed them to perpetual banishment from their families and friends; but they did not, even by the most distant hint, impeach the juffice of that fentence by which they were condemned; although one of them, who feemed to be about the age of thirty, wept bitterly over his misfortune, which had involved a beloved wife and three children in mifery and diftrefs, and, in the impatience of his grief, curfed his own fate with frantic imprecations. His companions, with a view of beguiling his forrow, and manifefting their own hofpitality at the fame time, changed the topic of difcourfe, and circulated the bumpers with great affiduity; fo that all their cares were overwhelmed and forgotten, feveral drinking, French catches were fung, and mirth and good fellowship prevailed.

In the midft of this elevation, which commonly unlocks the moft hidden fentiment, and difpels every confideration of caution and conftraint, one of the entertainers, being more intoxicated than his fellows, propofed a toaft, to which Peregrine with fome warmth excepted, as an unmannerly infult. The other maintained his propolition with indecent heat; and the difpute beginning to grow very ferious, the company interpofed, and gave judgment against their friend, who was fo keenly reproached and rebuked for his impolite behaviour, that he retired in high dudgeon, threatening to relinquish their fociety, and branding them with the appellation of apoftates from the common caufe. Mortified at the behaviour of their companion, those that remained were earnest in their apologies to their guests, whom they befought to forgive his intemperance, affuring them with great confidence, that he would, upon the recovery of his reflection, wait upon them in perfon, and afk pardon for the umbrage he had given. Pickle was fatisfied with their remonstrances, refumed his good humour, and the night being pretty far advanced, refifted all their importunities with which he was entreated to fee another bottle go round, and was efcorted to his own lodgings more than half feas over. Next morning, about eight o'clock, he was waked by his valet de chambre, who told him that two of the gentlemen with whom he had fpent the evening, were in the house, and defired the favour of being admitted into his chamber. He could not conceive the meaning of this extraordinary vifit, and, ordering his man to fhow them into his apartment, beheld the perfon who had affronted him enter, with the gentleman who had reprehended his rudenefs.

He who had given the offence, after having made an apology for diffurbing Mr. Pickle, told him that his friend there prefent had been with him early that morning, and proposed the alternative of either fighting with him immediately, or coming to beg pardon for his unmannerly deportment over night; that, though he had courage enough to face any man in the field in a righteous caufe, he was not fo brutal as to difobey the dictates of his own duty and reflection, in confequence of which, and not out of any regard to the other's menaces, which he defpifed, he had now taken the liberty of interrupting his repole, that he might, as foon as possible, atone for the injury he had done him, which he protefted was the effect of intoxication alone, and begged his forgiveness accordingly. Our hero accepted of this acknowledgment very graciously, thanked the other gentleman for the gallant part he had acted in his behalf; and, perceiving that his companion was a little irritated at his officious interpolition, effected a reconciliation, by convincing him that what he had done was for the honour of the company. He then kept them to breakfaft, expressed a detire of feeing their fituation altered for the better; and, the chaife being repaired, took leave of his entertainers, who came to wish him a good journey, and with his attendants left Boulogne for the fecond time.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Proceeds for the capital. Takes up his lodgings at Bernay, where he is overtaken by Mr. Hornbeck, whole head he longs to fortify.

DURING this day's expedition, Mr. Jolter took an opportunity of imparting to his pupil the remarks he had made upon the industry of the French, as an undeniable proof of which he bade him cast his eyes around, and obferve with what care every fpot of ground was cultivated; and, from the fertility of that province, which is reckoned the pooreft in France, conceive the wealth and affluence of the nation in general. Peregrine, amazed as well as difgusted at this infatuation, answered, that what he afcribed to induftry was the effect of mere wretchednefs; the miferable peafants being obliged to plough up every inch of ground to fatisfy their oppreflive landlords, while they themfelves and their cattle looked like fo many images of famine; that their extreme poverty was evident from the face of the country, on which there was not one enclofure to be feen, or any other object, except fcanty crops of barley and oats, which could never reward the toil of the hufbandman; that their habitations were no better than paltry huts; that, in twenty miles of extent, not one gentleman's house appeared; that nothing was more abject and forlorn than the attire of their country people; that the equipage of their travelling chaifes was infinitely inferior to that of a dung-cart in England; and that the postillion, who then drove their carriage, had neither stockings to his legs, nor a shirt to his back.

The governor, finding his charge fo untractable, refolved to leave him in the midft of his own ignorance and prejudice, and referve his obfervations for those who would pay more deference to his opinion : And indeed this refolution he had often made, and as often broke, in the transports of his zeal, that frequently hurried him out of the plan of conduct which in his cooler moments he had laid down. They halted for a refreshment at Montreuil, and about feven in the evening arrived at a village called Bernay, where, while they waited for fresh horfes, they were informed by the landlord, that the gates of Abbeville were fhut every night punctually at eight o'clock, fo that it would be impossible for them to get admittance. He faid, there was not another place of entertainment on the road where they could pafs the night; and therefore, as a friend, he advifed them to flay at his houfe, where they would find the beft of accommodation, and proceed upon their journey betimes in the morning.

Mr. Jolter, though he had travelled on that road before, could not recollect whether or not mine hoft fpoke trath; but his remonstrance being very plausible, our hero determined to follow his advice, and, being conducted into an apartment, afked what they could have for fupper. The landlord mentioned every thing that was eatable in the house, and the whole being engroffed for the use of him and his attendants, he amufed himfelf till fuch time as it fhould be dreffed, in ftrolling about the houfe, which ftands in a very rural fituation. While he thus loitered away the time that hung heavy on his hands, another chaife arrived at the inn; and, upon inquiry, he found that the new comers were Mr. Hornbeck and his lady. The landlord, confcious of his inability to entertain this fecond company, came and begged with great humiliation, that Mr. Pickle would fpare them fome part of the victuals he had befpoke; but he refused to part with fo much as the wing of a partridge, though at the fame time he fent his compliments to the ftrangers, and, giving them to underftand how ill the house was provided for their reception, invited them to partake of his fupper. Mr. Hornbeck, who was not deficient in point of politenefs, and extremely well difpoted for a relifning meal, which he had reafon to expect, from the favoury steam that iffued from the kitchen, could not refift this fecond Vol. II. 0 inftance of our young gentleman's civility, which he acknowledged by a meffage, importing that he and his wife would do themfelves the pleafure of profiting by his courteous offer. Peregrine's cheeks glowed when he found himfelf on the eve of being acquainted with Mrs. Hornbeck, of whofe heart he had already made a conqueft in imagination; and he forthwith fet his invention at work to contrive fome means of defeating her hufband's vigilance.

When fupper was ready, he in perfon gave notice to his gueft, and leading the lady into his apartment, feated her in an elbow chair at the upper end of the table, fqueezing her hand, and darting a most infidious glance at the fame time. This abrupt behaviour he practifed, on the prefumption that a lady of her breeding was not to be addreffed with the tedious forms that muft be observed in one's advances to a perfon of birth and genteel education. In all probability his calculation was just; for Mrs. Hornbeck gave no figns of difcontent at this fort of treatment, but, on the contrary, feemed to confider it as a proof of the young gentleman's regard ; and though fhe did not venture to open her mouth three times during the whole repair, the thowed herfelf particularly well fatisfied with her entertainer, by fundry fly and fignificant looks, while her husband's eyes were directed another way, and divers loud peals of laughter, fignifying her approbation of the fallies which he uttered in the course of their conversation. Her spoule began to be very uneasy at the frank demeanour of his yoke-fellow, whom he endeavoured to check in her vivacity, by affuming a feverity of afpect; but whether fhe obeyed the dictates of her own difposition, which perhaps was merry and unreferved, or wanted to punish Mr. Hornbeck for his jealoufy of temper, certain it is, her gaiety increased to fuch a degree, that her hufband was grievoufly alarmed and incenfed at her conduct, and refolved to make her fenfible of his difpleafure, by treading in fecret upon her toes. He was, however, fo difconcerted by his indignation, that he miftook his mark, and applied the fharp heel of his fhoe to the fide of Mr. Jolter's foot, comprehending his little toe that was fludded with an angry corn, which he invaded with fuch a fudden jerk, that the governor, unable to endure the torture in filence, ftarted up, and, dancing on the floor, roared hideoufly with repeated bellowings, to the unfpeakable enjoyment of Peregrine and the lady, who laughed themfelves almost into convultions at the joke. Hornbeck, confounded at the mistake he had committed, begged pardon of the injured tutor with great contrition, protefting that the blow he had fo unfortunately received was intended for an ugly cur which he thought had posted himfelf under the table. It was lucky for him that there was actually a dog in the room, to juftify this excufe, which Jolter admitted with the tears running over his cheeks; and the economy of the table was recomposed.

As foon, however, as the ftrangers could with decency withdraw, this fufpicious hufband took his leave of the youth, on pretence of being fatigued with his journey, after having, by way of compliment, proposed that they fhould travel together next day; and Peregrine handed the lady to her chamber, where he wifhed her good night with another warm fqueeze, which fhe returned. This favourable hint made his heart bound with a transport of joy; he lay in wait for an opportunity of declaring himfelf, and feeing the hufband go down into the yard with a candle, glided foftly into his apartment, where he found her almost undreffed. Impelled by the impetuosity of his paffion, which was ftill more inflamed by her prefent lufcious appearance, and encouraged by the approbation fhe had already expressed, he ran towards her with eagerness, crying, " Zounds ! Madam, your charms are irrefiftible !!" and, without further ceremony, would have clafped her in his arms, had the not begged him, for the love of God, to retire, for fhould Mr. Hornbeck return and find him there, the would be undone for ever. He was not fo blinded by his paffion, but that he faw the reafonablenefs of her fear, and as he could not pretend to crown his wifhes at that interview, he avowed himfelf her lover, affured her that he would exhaust his whole invention in finding a proper opportunity for throwing himfelf at her feet; and in the mean time he ravished fundry small favours, which fhe, in the hurry of her fright, could not withhold from his impudence of addrefs. Having thus happily fettled the preliminaries, he withdrew to his own chamber, and fpent the whole night in contriving ftratagems to elude the jealous caution of his fellow-traveller.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

They fet out in company, I reakfall at Abbeville, dine at Amiens, and about eleven o'clock arrive at Chantilly, where Peregrine executes a plan which he had concerted upon Hornbeck.

The whole company, by agreement, role and departed before day, and breakfafted at Abbeville, where they became acquainted with the fineffe of their Bernay landlord, who had imposed upon them, in affirming that they would not have been admitted after the gates were flut. From thence they proceeded to Amiens, where they dined, and were peffered by begging friars; and the roads being deep, it was eleven o'clock at night before they reached Chantilly, where they found fupper already dreffed, in confequence of having defpatched the valet de chambre before them on horieback.

The conflitution of Hornbeck being very much impaired by a life of irregularity, he found himfelf fo fatigued with his day's journey, which amounted to upwards of an hundred miles, that, when he fat down at table, he could fearcely fit upright; and, in lefs than three minutes, began to nod in his chair. Peregrine, who had forefeen and provided for this occasion, advifed him to exhilarate his fpirits with a glafs of wine; and the propofal being embraced, tipped his valct de chambre the wink, who, according to the inftructions he had received, qualified the Burgundy with thirty drops of laudanum, which this unfortunate hufband fwallowed in one glafs. The dofe, co-operating with his former drowfinefs, lulled him fo faft afleep, as it were inftantancoufly, that it was found neceffary to convey him to his own chamber, where his footman undreffed and put him to bed. Nor was Jolter (naturally of a fluggifh difpolition) able to refift his propenfity to fleep, without fuffering divers dreadful yawns, which encouraged his pupil to administer the fame dofe to him, which had operated fo fuccefsfully upon the other Argus. This cordial had not fuch a gentle effect upon the rugged organs of Jolter, as upon the more delicate nerves of Hornbeck; but difeovered itfelf in certain involuntary flartings, and convulfive motions in the mufcles of his face; and when his nature at length yielded to the power of this medicine, he founded the trumpet fo loud through his noftrils, that our adventurer was afraid the noife would wake his other patient, and confequently prevent the accomplifhment of his aim. The governor was therefore committed to the care of Pipes, who lugged him into the next room, and having ftripped off his clothes, tumbled him into his neft, while the two lovers remained at full liberty to indulge their mutual paffion.

Peregrine, in the impatience of his inclination, would have finished the fate of Hornbeck immediately; but his inamorata difapproved of his intention, and reprefented that their being together by themfelves for any length of time, would be obferved by her fervant, who was kept as a fpy upon her actions; fo that they had recourse to another scheme, which was executed in this manner-He conducted her into her own apartment, in prefence of her footman, who lighted them thither, and, withing her good reft, returned to his own chamber, where he waited till every thing was quiet in the house; then, stealing fostly to her door, which had been left open for his admiffion in the dark, he found the hufband ftill fecure in the embraces of fleep, and the lady in a loofe gown, ready to feal his happinels. He conveyed her to his own chamber; but his guilty paffion was not gratified.

The opium which had been given to Jolter, together with the wine he had drank, produced fuch a perturbation in his fancy, that he was vifited with horrible dreams, and, among other miferable fituations, imagined himfelf in danger of perifhing in the flames, which he thought had taken hold on his apartment.—This vifion made fuch an imprefion upon his faculties, that he alarmed the whole houfe with the repeated cries of fire ! fire ! and even leaped out of his bed, though he ftill continued fafr afleep. The lovers were very difagreeably diffurbed by this dreadful exclamation, and Mrs. Hornbeck, running in great confusion to the door, had the mortification to fee the footman, with a light in his hand, enter her hufband's chamber, in order to give him notice of this accident. She knew that fle would be inftantly miffed, and could eafily divine the confequence, unlefs her invention could immediately trump up fome plaufible excufe for her abfence.

Women are naturally fruitful of expedients in cafes of fuch emergency; fhe employed but a few feconds in recollection, and rushing directly towards the apartment of the governor, who still continued to hollow in the fame note, exclaimed in a fcreaming tone, " Lord have mercy upon us ! where ? where ?" By this time all the fervants were affembled in strange attire ; Peregrine burst into Jolter's room, and feeing him ftalking in his fhirt, with his eyes thut, beftowed fuch a flap upon his back, as in a moment diffolved his dream, and reftored him to the ufe of his fenfes. He was altonithed and afhamed at being difcovered in fuch an indecent attitude; and taking refuge under the clothes, afked pardon of all prefent for the diffurbance he had occafioned; foliciting with great humility the forgiveness of the lady, who, to a miracle, counterfeited the utmost agitation of terror and furprife. Meanwhile, Hornbeck being awakened by the repeated efforts of his man, no fooner understood that his wife was miffing, than all the chimeras of jealoufy taking poffeffion of his imagination, he ftarted up in a fort of frenzy, and fnatching his fword, flew ftraight to Peregrine's chamber; where, though he found not that which he looked for, he unluckily perceived an under-petticoat, which his wife had forgot in the hurry of her retreat. This difcovery added fuel to the flame of his refentment. He feized the fatal proof of his difhonour, and meeting his fpoufe in her return to bed, prefented it to her view, faying, with a most expressive countenance, " Madam, you have dropped your under-petticoat in the next room." Mrs. Hornbeck, who inherited from nature a most admirable prefence of mind, looked earneftly at the object in queftion, and with incredible ferenity of countenance, affirmed that the petticoat must belong to the houfe, for fhe had none fuch in her poffeffion. Peregrine, who walked behind her, hearing this affeveration, immediately interpofed, and pulling Hornbeck by the fleeve into his chamber, "Gads zooks! (faid he) what bufinefs had you with that petticoat?

Can't you let a young fellow enjoy a little amour with a innkeeper's daughter, without exposing his infirmities to your wife ? Pfhaw ! that fo malicious, becaufe you have quitted these adventures yourfelf, to spoil the sport of other people."-The poor hufband was fo confounded at the effrontery of his wife, and this cavalier declaration of the young man, that his faith began to waver; he diftrufted his own confcious diffidence of temper, which, that he might not expose, he expressed no doubts of Peregrine's veracity, but, asking pardon for the mistake he had committed, retired. He was not yet fatisfied with the behaviour of his ingenious helpmate, but, on the contrary, determined to inquire more minutely into the circumstances of this adventure, which turned out fo little to his fatisfaction, that he ordered his fervant to get every thing ready for his departure by break of day; and when our adventurer rofe next morning, he found that his fellow-travellers were gone above three hours, though they had agreed to ftay all the forenoon, with a view of feeing the Prince of Conde's palace, and to proceed altogether for Paris in the afternoon.

Peregrine was a little chagrined when he underftood that he was fo fuddenly deprived of this untafted morfel; and Jolter could not conceive the meaning of their abrupt and uncivil difappearance, which, after many profound conjectures, he accounted for, by fuppofing that Hornbeck was fome fharper who had run away with an heirefs, whom he found it neceffary to conceal from the inquiry of her friends.

The pupil, who was well affured of the true motive, allowed his governor to enjoy the triumph of his own penetration, and confoled himfelf with the hope of feeing his Dulcinea again at fome of the public places in Paris, which he propoled to frequent. Thus comforted, he vifited the magnificent ftables and palace of Chantilly, and immediately after dinner they fet out for Paris, where they arrived in the evening, and hired apartments at an hotel in the Fauxbourgh St. Germaine, not far from the playhoufe.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

He is involved in an adventure at Paris, and taken prifoner by the cityguard. Becomes acquainted with a French nobleman, who introduces him in the beau monde.

 $T_{\text{HEY}}$  were no fooner fettled in thefe lodgings than our hero wrote to his uncle an account of their fafe arrival, and fent another letter to his friend Gauntlet, with a very tender billet enclofed for his dcar Emilia, to whom he repeated all his former vows of conftancy and love.

The next care that engroffed him was that of befpeaking feveral fuits of clothes fuitable to the French mode, and in the mean time he never appeared abroad, except in the English coffeehouse, where he foon became acquainted with fome of his own countrymen, who were at Paris on the fame footing with himfelf .- The third evening after his journey, he was engaged in a party of those young sparks, at the house of a noted traiteur, whose wife was remarkably handfome, and otherwife extremely well qualified for alluring cuftomers to her houfc. this lady our young gentleman was introduced as a ftran-'ger fresh from England; and he was charmed with her perfonal accomplifhments, as well as with the freedom and gaiety of her conversation .- Her frank deportment perfuaded him that fhe was one of those kind creatures who granted favours to the beft bidder; on this fuppofition he began to be fo importunate in his addreffes, that the fair Bourgeoife was compelled to cry aloud in defence of her own virtue. Her hufband ran immediately to her atliftance, and, finding her in a very alarming fituation, flew upon her ravifher with fuch fury, that he was fain to quit his prey, and turn against the exafperated traiteur, whom he punished without mercy for his impudent intrufion. The lady feeing her yoke-fellow treated with fo little respect, espoufed his caufe, and fixing her nails in his antagonift's face, scarified all one fide of his nofe. The noise of this encounter brought all the fervants of the houfe to the refcue of their mafter, and Peregrine's company oppofing them, a general battle enfued, in which the French were totally routed, the wife infulted, and the hufband kicked down ftairs.

The publican, enraged at the indignity which had been offered to him and his family, went out into the ftreer, and implored the protection of the guet or city-guard, which, having heard his complaint, fixed their bayonets and furrounded the door, to the number of twelve or fourteen. The young gentlemen, fluthed with their fuccefs, and confidering the foldiers as fo many London watchmen, whom they had often put to flight, drew their fwords, and fallied out, with Peregrine at their head. Whether the guard refpected them as foreigners, or inexperienced youths intoxicated with liquor, they opened to right and left, and gave them room to pass without opposition. This complaifance, which was the effect of compassion, being missinterpreted by the English leader, he out of mere wantonnefs attempted to trip up the heels of the foldier that ftood next him, but failed in the execution, and received a blow on his breaft with the butt end of his fufil, that made him stagger feveral paces backward. Incenfed at this audacious application, the whole company charged the detachment fword in hand, and, after an obstinate engagement, in which divers wounds were given and received, every foul of them was taken, and conveyed to the main-guard. The commanding officer, being made acquainted with the circumstances of the quarrel, in confideration of their youth and national ferocity, for which the French make large allowances, fet them all at liberty, after having gently rebuked them for the irregularity and infolence of their conduct; fo that all our hero acquired by his gallantry and courage, was a number of fcandalous marks upon his vifage, that confined him a whole week to his chamber. It was impoffible to conceal this difafter from Mr. Jolter, who, having obtained intelligence of the particulars, did not fail to remonstrate against the rashness of the adventure, which, he obferved, must have been fatal to them, had their enemies been other than Frenchmen, who, of all people under the fun, most rigoroufly observe the laws of hospitality.

As the governor's acquaintance lay chiefly among Irifh and Englifh priefts, and a fet of low people who live by making themfelves neceffary to ftrangers, either in teaching the French language, or executing finall commiffions with which they are intrufted, he was not the most proper perfon in the world for regulating the tafte of a young gentleman who travelled for improvement, in expectation of making a figure one day in his own country. Being confcious of his own incapacity, he contented himfelf with the office of a fteward, and kept a faithful account of all the money that was difburfed in the courfe of their family expence; not but that he was acquainted with all the places which were vifited by ftrangers on their firft arrival at Paris; and he knew to a liard what was commonly given to the Swifs of each remarkable hotel; though, with refpect to the curious painting and ftatuary that every where abound in that metropolis, he was more ignorant than the domeftic that attends for a livre a-day.

In thort, Mr. Jolter could give a very good account of the ftages on the road, and fave the expence of Antonini's detail of the curiofities in Paris; he was a connoifieur in ordinaries, from twelve to five and thirty livres, knew all the rates of a fiacre and remife, could difpute with a taileur or a traiteur upon the articles of his bill, and fcold the fervants in tolerable French. But the laws, cuftoms, and genius of the people, the characters of individuals, and fcenes of polifhed life, were fubjects which he had neither opportunities to obferve, inclination to confider, nor difcernment to diftinguish. All his maxims were the fuggestions of pedantry and prejudice ; fo that his perception was obscured, his judgment biaffed, his address awkward, and his conversation absurd and unentertaining; yet fuch as I have reprefented this tutor, is the greatest part of those animals who lead raw boys about the world, under the denomination of travelling governors. Peregrine, therefore, being perfectly well acquainted with the extent of Mr. Jolter's abilities, never dreamed of confulting him in the difpolition of his conduct, but parcelled out his time according to the dictates of his own reflection, and the information and direction of his companions, who had lived longer in France, and confequently were better acquainted with the pleafures of the place.

As foon as he was in a condition to appear a la Françoife, he hired a genteel chariot by the month, made the tour of the Luxembourg gallery, Palais Royal, all the remarkable hotels, churches, and celebrated places in Paris; vifited St. Cloud, Marli, Verfailles, Trianon, St. Germaine, and Fountainbleau; enjoyed the opera, masquerades, Italian and French comedy; and feldom failed of appearing in the public walks, in hopes of meeting with Mrs. Hornbeck, or fome adventure fuited to his romantic difpolition. He never doubted that his perfon would attract the notice of fome diftinguished inamorata, and was vain enough to believe that few female hearts were able to refift the artillery of his accomplifhments, fhould he once find an opportunity of planting it to advantage. He prefented himfelf, however, at all the fpectacles for many weeks, without reaping the fruits of his expectation ; and began to entertain a very indifferent idea of the French difcernment, which had overlooked him fo long, when one day, in his way to the opera, his chariot was ftopped by an embarras in the ftreet, occafioned by two peafants, who, having driven their carts against each other, quarrelled, and went to loggerheads on the fpot. Such a rencounter is fo uncommon in France, that the people flut up their flops, and from their windows threw cold water upon the combatants, with a view of putting an end to the battle, which was maintained with great fury and very little skill, until one of them receiving an accidental fall, the other took the advantage of this misfortune, and fastening upon him as he lay, began to thump the pavement with his head. Our hero's equipage being detained clofe by the field of this contention, Pipes could not bear to fee the laws of boxing fo fcandaloufly tranfgreffed, and, leaping from his ftation, pulled the offender from his antagonift, whom he raifed up, and, in the English language, encouraged to a fecond effay, inftructing him at the fame time, by clenching his fifts according to art, and putting himfelf in a proper attitude. Thus confirmed, the enraged carman fprung upon his foe, and in all appearance would have effectually revenged the injury he had fuftained, if he had not been prevented by the interpolition of a lacquey belonging to a nobleman, whole coach was obliged to halt in confequence of the difpute. This footman, who was diffinguished by a cane, descending from his poft, without the least ceremony or expostulation, began to employ his weapon upon the head and fhoulders of the peafant who had been patronized by Pipes; upon which Thomas, refenting fuch ungenerous behaviour, beflowed fuch a flomacher upon the officious intermeddler. as difcomposed the whole economy of his entrails, and obliged him to difcharge the interjection Ah ! with demonftrations of great anguish and amazement. The other two footmen who flood behind the coach, feeing their feilow-fervant fo infolently affaulted, flew to his affiftance, and rained a most difagreeable thower upon the head of his aggreffor, who had no means of diversion or defence. Peregrine, though he did not approve of Tom's conduct, could not bear to fee him to roughly handled, efpecially as he thought his own honour concerned in the fray, and therefore quitting his machine, came to the refeue of his attendant, and charged his adverfaries fword in hand. Two of them no fooner perceived this reinforcement than they betook themfelves to flight; and Pipes, having twifted the cane out of the hands of the third, belaboured him fo unmercifully, that our hero thought proper to interpofe his authority in his bchalf. The common people flood aghaft at this unprecedented boldnefs of Pickle, who, underftanding that the perion whole fervants he had difciplined was a general and prince of the blood, went up to the coach, and afked pardon for what he had done, imputing his own behaviour to his ignorance of the other's quality. The old nobleman accepted of his apology with great politenefs, thanking him for the trouble he had taken to reform the manners of his domeflies; and gueffing from our youth's appearance, that he was fome ftranger of condition, very courteoufly invited him into the coach, on the fuppolition that they were both going to the opera. Pickle gladly embraced this opportunity of becoming acquainted with a perfon of fuch rank, and, ordering his own chariot to follow, accompanied the count to his loge, where he converfed with him during the whole entertainment.

He foon perceived that Peregrine was not deficient in fpirit or fenfe, and feemed particularly pleafed with his engaging manner and eafy deportment, qualifications for which the Englifh nation is by no means remarkable in France, and therefore the more confpicuous and agreeable in the character of our hero, whom the nobleman carried home that fame evening, and introduced to his lady and feveral perfons of fashion, who fupped at his houfe. Peregrine was quite captivated by their affable behaviour and the vivacity of their difcourfe; and, after having been honoured with particular marks of confideration, took his leave, fully determined to cultivate fuch a valuable acquaintance.

His vanity fuggefted, that now the time was come when he fhould profit by his talents among the fair fex, on whom he refolved to employ his utmolt art and addrefs. With this view he affiduoufly engaged in all parties to which he had accefs by means of his noble friend, who let flip no opportunity of gratifying his ambition. He, for fome time, fhared in all his amufements, and was entertained in many of the best families of France; but he did not long enjoy that elevation of hope, which had flattered his imagination. He foon perceived that it would be impofible to maintain the honourable connections he had made, without engaging every day at quadrille, or, in other words, lofing his money; for every perfon of rank, whether male or female, was a profeffed gamester, who knew and practifed all the finesse of the art, of which he was entirely ignorant. Befides, he began to find himfelf a mere novice in French gallantry, which is fupported by an amazing volubility of tongue, an obsequious and incredible attention to trifles, a furprifing facility of laughing out of pure complaifance, and a nothingnels of converfation, which he could never attain. In fhort, our hero, who, among his own countrymen, would have paffed for a fprightly entertaining fellow, was confidered in the brilliant affemblies of France as a youth of a very phlegmatic difpolition. No wonder then that his pride was mortified at his own want of importance, which he did not fail to afcribe to their defect in point of judgment and tafte : He conceived a difguft at the mercenary conduct, as well as the fhallow intellects of the ladies; and, after he had fpent fome months, and a round fum of money, in fruitlefs attendance and addreffes, he fairly quitted the purfuit, and confoled himfelf with the conversation of a merry fille de joye, whole good graces he acquired by an allowance of twenty Louis per month. That he might the more eafily afford this expence, he difmified his chariot and French lacquey at the fame time.

He then entered himfelf in a noted academy, in order to finish his exercises, and contracted an acquaintance with a few fenfible people, whom he diftinguished at the coffeehouse and ordinary to which he reforted, and who contributed not a little to the improvement of his knowledge and tafte : For, prejudice apart, it must be owned that France abounds with men of confummate honour, profound fagacity, and the most liberal education. From the conversation of such, he obtained a distinct idea of their government and conftitution; and though he could not help admiring the excellent order and economy of their police, the refult of all his inquiries was felf-congratulation on his title to the privileges of a British subject. Indeed this invaluable birthright was rendered confpicuous by fuch flagrant occurrences, which fell every day almost under his obfervation, that nothing but the groffeft prejudice could dispute its existence.

CHAPTER XL.

Acquires a diffinct idea of the French government; quarrels with a moufquetaire, whom he afterwards fights and vanquifles, after having punifhed him for interfering in his amorous recreations.

AMONG many other inftances of the fame nature, I believe it will not be amifs to exhibit a few fpecimens of their administration, which happened during his abode at Paris, that those who have not the opportunity of observing for themselves, or are in danger of being influenced by misrepresentation, may compare their own condition with that of their neighbours, and do justice to the constitution under which they live.

A lady of diftinguithed character having been lampooned by fome obfcure fcribbler, who could not be difcovered, the miniftry, in confequence of her complaint, ordered no fewer than five-and-twenty abbés to be apprehended and fent to the Baftile, on the maxim of Herod, when he commanded the innocents to be murdered, hoping that the principal object of his cruelty would not efcape in the general calamity; and the friends of thofe unhappy prifoners durft not even complain of the unjuft perfecution, but fhrugged up their fhoulders, and, in filence, deplored their misfortune, uncertain whether or not they fhould ever fet eyes on them again.

About the fame time a gentleman of family, who had been oppreffed by a certain powerful duke that lived in the neighbourhood, found means to be introduced to the king, who, receiving his petition very gracioufly, afked in what regiment he ferved ; and, when the memorialist anfwered, that he had not the honour of being in the fervice, returned the paper unopened, and refufed to hear one circumstance of his complaint; fo that, far from being redreffed, he remained more than ever exposed to the tyranny of his oppreffor : Nay, fo notorious is the difcouragement of all those who prefume to live independent of court favour and connections, that one of the gentlemen, whofe friendship Peregrine cultivated, frankly owned he was in possession of a most romantic place in one of the provinces, and deeply enamoured of a country life; and yet he durft not refide upon his own eftate, left, by flackening in his attendance upon the great, who honoured him with their protection, he should fall a prey to fome rapacious intendant.

As for the common people, they are fo much inured to the fcourge and infolence of power, that every fhabby fubaltern, every beggarly cadet of the nobleffe, every low retainer to the court, infults and injures them with impunity. A certain ecuyer, or horfe-dealer, belonging to the king, being one day under the hands of a barber, who happened to cut the head of a pimple on his face, he started up, and drawing his fword, wounded him defperately in the fhoulder. The poor tradefman, hurt as he was, made an effort to retire, and was followed by this barbarous affaffin, who, not contented with the vengeance he had taken, plunged his fword a fecond time into his body, and killed him on the fpot. Having performed this inhuman exploit, he dreffed himfelf with great deliberation, and, going to Verfailles, immediately obtained a pardon for what he had done; triumphing in his brutality with fuch infolence, that the very next time he had occasion to be shaved, he fat with his fword ready drawn, in order to repeat the murder, in cafe the barber fhould commit the fame miftake. Yet fo tamed are those poor people to fubjection, that when Peregrine mentioned this affafination to his own trimmer, with expressions of horror and detestation, the infatuated wretch replied, that without all doubt it was a misfortune, but it proceeded from the gentleman's passion; and observed, by way of encomium on the government, that such vivacity is never punished in France.

A few days after this outrage was committed, our youth, who was a professed enemy to all oppression, being in one of the first loges at the comedy, was eye-witnefs of an adventure, which filled him with indignation : A tall ferocious fellow, in the parterre, without the leaft provocation, but prompted by the mere wantonnefs of pride, took hold of the hat of a very decent young man, who happened to fland before him, and twirled it round upon his head. The party thus offended turned to the aggreffor, and civilly afked the reafon of fuch treatment, but he received no anfwer; and when he looked the other way, the infult was repeated : Upon which he expreffed his refentment as became a man of fpirit, and dcfired the offender to walk out with him. No foonor did he thus fignify his intention, than his adverfary, fwelling with rage, cocked his hat ficrcely in his face, and, fixing his hands in his fides, pronounced with the moft imperious tone, " Hark ye, Mr. Round Periwig, you must know that I am a moulquetaire." Scarce had this awful word efcaped from his lips, when the blood forfook the lips of the poor challenger, who, with the most abject fubmiffion, begged pardon for his prefumption, and with difficulty obtained it, on condition that he should immediately quit the place. Having thus exercifed his authority, he turned to one of his companions, and, with an air of difdainful ridicule, told him he was like to have had an affair with a Bourgcois; adding, by way of heightening the irony, " Egad ! I believe he's a phyfician."

Our hero was fo much fhocked and irritated at this licentious behaviour, that he could not fupprefs his refentment, which he manifefted, by faying to this Hector, "Sir, a phyfician may be a man of honour." To this remonstrance, which was delivered with a very fignificant countenance, the moulquetaire made no other reply, but that of echoing his affertion with a loud laugh, in which he was joined by his confederates. Peregrine, glowing with refentment, called him a Fanfaron, and withdrew in expectation of being followed into the ftreet. The other underftood the hint, and a rencounter muft have enfued, had not the officer of the guard, who overheard what paffed, prevented their meeting, by putting the moulquetaire immediately under arreft. Our young gentleman waited at the door of the parterre, until he was informed of this interpolition, and then went home very much chagrined at his difappointment; for he was an utter ftranger to fear and diffidence on those occasions, and had fet his heart upon chaftifing the infolence of this bully, who had treated him with fuch difrespect.

This adventure was not fo private but that it reached the ears of Mr. Jolter, by the canal of fome English gentlemen who were prefent when it happened; and the governor, who entertained a most dreadful idea of the moulquetaires, being alarmed at a quarrel, the confequence of which might be fatal to his charge, waited on the British ambasiador, and begged he would take Peregrine under his immediate protection. His Excellency, having heard the circumstances of the dispute, fent one of his gentlemen to invite the youth to dinner; and, after having affured him that he might depend upon his countenance and regard, reprefented the rafhnefs and impetuofity of his conduct fo much to his conviction, that he promifed to act more circumfpectly for the future, and drop all thoughts of the moulquetaire from that moment.

A few days after he had taken this laudable refolution, Pipes, who had carried a biliet to his miftrefs, informed him that he had perceived a laced hat lying upon a marble flab in her apartment; and that, when the came out of her own chamber to receive the letter, the appeared in manifeft diforder.

From these hints of intelligence, our young gentleman suspected, or rather made no doubt of her infidelity; and, being by this time well nigh cloyed with possible fillion, was not forry to find that the had given him cause to renounce her correspondence. That he might therefore detect her in the very breach of duty, and, at the fame time, punish  $V_{cl}$ . II, P

the gallant who had the prefumption to invade his territories, he concerted with himfelf a plan, which was executed in this manner: During his next interview with his dulcinea, far from difcovering the leaft fign of jealoufy or difcontent, he affected the appearance of extraordinary fondnefs; and, after having fpent the afternoon with the flow of uncommon fatisfaction, told her he was engaged in a party for Fountainbleau, and would fet out from Paris that fame evening; fo that he flould not have the pleafure of feeing her again for fome days.

The lady, who was very well verfed in the arts of her occupation, pretended to receive this piece of news with great affliction, and conjured him, with fuch marks of real tendernefs, to return as foon as pollible to her longing arms, that he went away almost convinced of her funcerity. Determined, however, to profecute his fcheme, he actually departed from Paris with two or three gentlemen of his acquaintance, who had hired a remife for a jaunt to Verfailles; and, having accompanied them as far as the village of Paffe, returned in the dusk of the evening on foot.

He waited patiently till midnight, and then arming himfelf with a cafe of pocket pittols, and attended by trufty Tom, with a cudgel in his hand, repaired to the lodgings of his fufpected inamorata. Having given Pipes his cue, he knocked gently at the door, which was no fooner opened by the lacquey, than he bolted in, before the fellow could recollect himfelf from the confusion occalioned by his unexpected appearance ; and, leaving Tom. to guard the door, ordered the trembling valet to light him up stairs into his lady's apartment. The first object that prefented itfelf to his view, when he entered the antichamber, was a fword upon the table, which he immediately feized, exclaiming in a loud and menacing voice, that his miftrefs was falfe, and then in bed with another gallant, whom he would inftantly put to death. This declaration, confirmed by many terrible oaths, he calculated for the hearing of his rival, who, understanding his fanguinary purpofe, flarted up in great trepidation, and, naked as he was, dropped from the balcony into the ftreet, while Peregrine thundered at the door for admittance; and gueffing his defign, gave him an opportunity of making this precipitate retreat. Pipes, who ftood centinel at the door, obferving the fugitive defcend, attacked him with his cudgel, and fweating him from one end of the ftreet to the other, at laft committed him to the guet, by whom he was conveyed to the officer on duty in a moft difgraceful and deplorable condition.

Meanwhile, Peregrine having burft open the chamber door, found the lady in the utmost dread and consternation, and the spoils of her favourite fcattered about the room; but his refentment was doubly gratified, when he learnt upon inquiry, that the person who had been so difagreeably interrupted was no other than that individual mousquetaire, with whom he had quarrelled at the comedy. He upbraided the nymph with her person and ingratitude, and, telling her that she muss not expect the continuance of his regard, or the appointments which she had hitherto enjoyed from his bounty, went home to his own lodgings, overjoyed at the issue of the adventure.

The foldier, exafperated at the difgrace he had undergone, as well as at the outrageous infult of the English valet, whom he believed his mafter had tutored for that purpofe, no fooner extricated himfelf from the opprobrious fituation he had incurred, than, breathing vengeance against the author of the affront, he came to Peregrine's apartment, and demanded fatisfaction upon the ramparts next morning before fun-rife. Our hero affured him, he would not fail to pay his refpects to him at the time and place appointed; and, forefeeing that he might be prevented from keeping this engagement by the officious care of his governor, who faw the moulquetaire come in, he told Mr. Jolter, that the Frenchman had visited him in confequence of an order he had received from his fuperiors, to make an apology for his rude behaviour to him in the playhoufe, and that they had parted good friends. This affurance, together with Pickle's very tranquil and unconcerned behaviour through the day, quieted the terrors which had begun to take poffeilion of his tutor's imagination; fo that the youth had an opportunity of giving him the flip at night, when he betook himfelf to the lodgings of a friend, whom he engaged as his fecond, and with whom he immediately took the field, in order to avoid the fearch which Jolter, upon miffing him, might fet on foot.

This was a neceffary precaution; for, as he did not appear at fupper, and Pipes, who ufually attended him in his excursions, could give no account of his motions, the governor was dreadfully alarmed at his abfence, and ordered his man to run in quest of his master to all the places which he used to frequent, while he himself went to the commiffaire, and, communicating his fufpicions, was accommodated with a party of the horfe-guards, who patrolled round all the environs of the city, with a view of preventing the rencounter. Pipes might have directed them to the lady, by whofe information they could have learnt the name and lodging of the moufquetaire, and, if he had been apprehended, the duel would not have happened ; but he did not choose to run the risk of disobliging his mafter, by intermeddling in the affair, and was moreover very defirous that the Frenchman should be humbled; for he never doubted that Peregrine was more than a match for any two men in France. In this confidence, therefore, he fought his mafter with great diligence, not with a view of difappointing his intention, but in order to attend him to the battle, that he might stand by him, and fee justice done.

While this inquiry was carried on, our hero and his companion concealed themfelves among fome weeds that grew on the edge of the parapet, a few yards from the fpot where he had agreed to meet the moulquetaire; and fcarce had the morning rendered objects diftinguishable, when they perceived their men advancing boldly to the place. Peregrine, feeing them approach, fprung forward to the ground, that he might have the glory of anticipating his antagonist; and, fwords being drawn, all four were engaged in a twinkling. Pickle's eagerness had well nigh coft him his life; for, without minding his footing, he flew directly to his opposite, and, ftumbling over a ftone, was wounded on one fide of his head, before he could recover his attitude. Far from being difpirited at this check, it ferved only to animate him the more : Being endowed with uncommon agility, he retrieved his pofture in a moment, and, having parried a fecond thruft, returned the longe with fuch incredible fpeed, that the foldier had not time to refume his guard, but was immediately run through the bend of his right arm, and, the fword dropping out of his hand, our hero's victory was complete.

. Having defpatched his own bufinefs, and received the acknowledgment of his adversary, who, with a look of infinite mortification, obferved, that his was the fortune of the day, he ran to part the feconds, just as the weapon was twifted out of his companion's hand; upon which he took his place, and, in all likelihood, an obstinate difpute would have enfued, had they not been interrupted by the guard, at fight of whom the two Frenchmen fcampered off. Our young gentleman and his friend allowed themfelves to be taken prifoners by the detachment which had been fent out for that purpofe, and were carried before the magistrate, who, having sharply reprimanded them for prefuming to act in contempt of the laws, fet them at liberty, in confideration of their being strangers, cautioning them, at the fame time, to beware of fuch exploits for the future.

When Peregrine returned to his own lodgings, Pipes, feeing the blood trickling down upon his maîter's neckcloth and folitaire, gave evident tokens of furprife and concern, not for the confequences of the wound, which he did not fuppofe dangerous, but for the glory of Old England, which he was afraid had fuffered in the engagement; for he could not help faying, with an air of chagrin, as he followed the youth into his chamber, " I do fuppofe as how you gave that lubberly Frenchman as good as he brought."

CHAPTER XLI.

Mr. Jolter threatens to leave him on account of his mifconduct, which he promifes to rectify; but his refolution is defeated by the impetuofity of his paffions. He meets accidentally with Mrs. Hornbeck, who elopes with him from her hufband, but is reftored by the interpofition of the British ambaffador.

1 HOUGH Mr. Jolter was extremely well pleafed at the fafety of his pupil, he could not forgive him for the terror and anxiety he had undergone on his account; and roundly told him, that, notwithftanding the inclination and attachment he had to his perfon, he would immediately depart for England, if ever he fhould hear of his being involved in fuch another adventure; for it could not be expected that he would facrifice his own quiet to an unrequited regard for one who feemed determined to keep him in continued uneafinefs and apprehenfion.

To this declaration Pickle made anfwer, that Mr. Jolter, by this time, ought to be convinced of the attention he had always paid to his eafe and fatisfaction; fince he well knew, that he had ever looked upon him in the light of a friend, rather than as a counfellor or tutor, and defired his company in France, with a view of promoting his intereft, not for any emolument he could expect from his inftruction. This being the cafe, he was at liberty to confult his own inclinations, with regard to going or flaying; though he could not help owning himfelf obliged by the concern he expressed for his fafety, and would endeavour, for his own fake, to avoid giving him any caufe of disturbance in time to come.

No man was more capable of moralizing upon Peregrine's milconduct than himfelf; his reflections were extremely just and fagacious, and attended with no other difadvantage but that of occurring too late. He projected a thousand falutary schemes of deportment, but, like other projectors, he never had interest enough with the miniftry of his paffions to bring any one of them to bear. He had, in the heyday of his gallantry, received a letter from his friend Gauntlet, with a kind postfcript from his charming Emilia; but it arrived at a very unfeafonable juncture, when his imagination was engroffed by conquefts that more agreeably flattered his ambition; fo that he could not find leifure and inclination, from that day, to honour the correspondence which he himself had folicited. His vanity had, by this time, disapproved of the engagement he had contracted in the rawnels and inexperience of youth; fuggesting, that he was born to make fuch an important figure in life as ought to raife his ideas above the confideration of any fuch middling connections, and fix his attention upon objects of the most sublime attraction. These dictates of ridiculous pride had almost effaced the remembrance of his amiable miftrefs, or at leaft

To far warped his morals and integrity, that he actually began to conceive hopes of her altogether unworthy of his own character and her deferts.

Meanwhile, being deftitute of a toy for the dalliance of his idle hours, he employed feveral fpies, and almost every day made a tour of the public places in perfon, with a view of procuring intelligence of Mr. Hornbeck, with whofe wife he longed to have another interview. In this courfe of expectation had he exercifed himfelf a whole fortnight, when, chancing to be at the hofpital of invalids, with a gentleman lately arrived from England, he no fooner entered the church, than he perceived this lady, attended by her spoufe, who, at fight of our hero, changed colour, and looked another way, in order to difcourage any communication between them. But the young man, who was not fo eafily repulfed, advanced with great affurance to his fellow-traveller, and, taking him by the hand, expressed his fatisfaction at this unexpected meeting, kindly upbraiding him for his precipitate retreat from Chantilly. Before Hornbeck could make any reply, he went up to his wife, whom he complimented in the fame manner, affuring her, with fome fignificant glances, he was extremely mortified that fhe had put it out of his power to pay his refpects to her on his first arrival at Paris; and then, turning to her hufband, who thought proper to keep close to him in this conference, begged to know where he could have the honour of waiting upon him; obferving, at the fame time, that he himfelf lived a l'Academie de Palfrenier.

Mr. Hornbeck, without making any apology for his elopement on the road, thanked Mr. Pickle for his complaifance in a very cool and difobliging manner, faying, that, as he intended to fhift his lodgings in a day or two, he could not expect the pleafure of feeing him until he fhould be fettled, when he would call at the academy, and conduct him to his new habitation.

Pickle, who was not unacquainted with the fentiments of this jealous gentleman, did not put much confidence in his promile, and therefore made divers efforts to enjoy-a little private converfation with his wife; but he was baffled in all his attempts by the indefatigable vigilance of her keeper, and reaped no other immediate pleature from this accidental meeting than that of a kind fqueeze while he handed her into the coach. However, as he had been witnefs to fome inftances of her invention, and was no ftranger to the favourable difpolition of her heart, he entertained fome faint hopes of profiting by her understanding, and was not deceived in his expectations; for, the very next afternoon, a Savoyard called at the academy, and put the following billet in his hand:

" Coind Sur,

"HEAVING the playfure of meating with you at the offpital of anvilheads, I take this lubbertea of latin you know, that I lotch at the Hottail de May cong dangle rouy Doghoufeten, with two poftis at the gait, naytheir of um very hole, ware I shall be at the windore, if in kais you will be fo good as to pass that way at ficks a cloak in the heavening, when Mr. Hornbeck goes to the Calf hay de Contea. Prey for the loaf of Geefus keep this from the nolegs of my hussban, ells he will make me leed a hell upon urth. Being all from, deer Sur,

" Your most umbell fervan wile " DEБОКАН HORNBECK."

Our young gentleman was ravifhed at the receipt of this elegant epiftle, which was directed A Monfr Monfr Pickhell, a la Gaddamme de Paul Freny, and did not fail to obey the fummons at the hour of affignation; when the lady, true to her appointment, beckoned him up ftairs, and he had the good fortune to be admitted unfeen.

After the first transports of their mutual joy at meeting, she told him that her husband had been very furly and cross ever fince the adventure at Chantilly, which he had not yet digested; that he had laid fevere injunctions upon her to avoid all commerce with Pickle, and even threatened to shut her up in a convent for life, if ever she should discover the least inclination to renew that acquaintance; that she had been cooped up in her chamber since her arrival at Paris, without being permitted to she the place, or indeed any company, except that of her landlady, whose language she did not understand; so that, her spirit being broke, and her health impaired, he was prevailed upon, fome days ago, to indulge her in a few airings, during which fhe had feen the gardens of the Luxembourg, the Thuilleries, and Palais Royal, though at those times when there was no company in the walks; and that it was in one of those excursions she had the happines of meeting with him. Finally, she gave him to understand, that, rather than continue longer under such confinement, with the man whom she could not love, she would instantly give him the slip, and put herself under the protection of her lover.

Rath and unthinking as this declaration might be, the young gentleman was to much of a gallant, that he would not baulk the lady's inclinations, and too infatuated by his pation to forefee the confequences of fuch a dangerous ftep. He therefore, without hefitation, embraced the propofal, and, the coaft being clear, they fallied into the ftreet, where Peregrine called a frace, and ordered the coachman to drive them to a tayern : But, knowing it would not be in his power to conceal her from the fearch of the lieutenant de police, if the fhould remain within the walls of Paris, he hired a remife, and carried her that fame evening to Villejuif, about four leagues from town, where he ftaid with her all night; and, having boarded her on a genteel penfion, and fettled the economy of his future vifits, returned next day to his own lodgings.

While he thus enjoyed his fucces, her husband endured the tortures of the damned. When he returned from the coffeehouse, and understood that his wife had eloped, without being perceived by any perfon in the family, he began to rave and foam with rage and jealoufy, and, in the fury of distraction, accused the landlady of being an accomplice in her escape, threatening to complain of her to the commiffaire. The woman could not conceive how Mrs. Hornbeck, who fhe knew was an utter ftranger to the French language, and kept no fort of company, could elude the caution of her hufband, and find any refuge in a place where fhe had no acquaintance; and began to fuspect the lodger's emotion was no other than an affected paffion to conceal his own practices upon his wife, who had perhaps fallen a facrifice to his jealous difpolition. She therefore fpared him the trouble of putting his menaces into execution, by going to the magistrate without any farther deliberation, and giving an account of what the knew concerning this mysterious affair, with certain infinuations against Hornbeck's character, which the represented as prevish and capricious to the last degree.

While fhe thus anticipated the purpofe of the plaintiff, her information was interrupted by the arrival of the party himfelf, who exhibited his complaint with fuch evident marks of perturbation, anger, and impatience, that the commiffaire could eafily perceive that he had no fhare in the difappearance of his wife; and directed him to the lieutenant de police, whofe province it is to take cognizance of fuch occurrences. This gentleman, who prefides over the city of Paris, having heard the particulars of Hornbeck's misfortune, afked if he fufpected any individual perfon as the feducer of his yoke-fellow; and, when he mentioned Peregrine as the object of his fufpicion, granted a warrant, and a detachment of foldiers, to fearch for and retrieve the fugitive.

The hufband conducted them immediately to the academy, where our hero lodged, and having rummaged the whole place, to the aftonifhment of Mr. Jolter, without finding either his wife or the fuppofed ravifher, accompanied them to all the public houfes in the Fauxbourg; which having examined alfo without fuccefs, he returned to the magiftrate in a ftate of defpair, and obtained a promife of his making fuch an effectual inquiry, that, in three days, he fhould have an account of her, provided fhe was alive, and within the walls of Paris.

Our adventurer, who had forefeen all this diffurbance, was not at all furprifed when his governor told him what had happened; and conjured him to reflore the woman to the right owner, with many pathetic remonftrances touching the heinous fin of adultery, the diffraction of the unfortunate hufband, and the danger of incurring the refentment of an arbitrary government, which, upon application being made, would not fail of efpoufing the caufe of the injured. He denied, with great effrontery, that he had the leaft concern in the matter, pretended to refent the deportment of Hornbeck, whom he threatened to chaftife for his fcandalous fufpicion, and expressed his difpleafure at the credulity of Jolter, who feemed to doubt the veracity of his affeveration.

Notwithstanding this confident behaviour, Jolter could not help entertaining doubts of his fincerity; and, vifiting the difconfolate fwain, begged he would, for the honour of his country, as well as for the fake of his own reputation, discontinue his addresses to the lieutenant de police, and apply to the British ambaffador, who, by dint of friendly admonitions, would certainly prevail upon Mr. Pickle to do him all the justice in his power, if he was really the author of the injury he had fuftained. The governor urged this advice with the appearance of fo much fympathy and concern, promifing to co-operate with all his influence in his behalf, that Hornbeck embraced the propofal, communicated his purpofe to the magistrate, who commended the resolution as the most decent and defirable expedient he could use, and then waited upon his excellency, who readily efpoufed his caufe, and, fending for the young gentleman that fame evening, read him fuch a lecture in private, as extorted a confession of the whole affair. Not that he affailed him with four and fupercilious maxims, or fevere rebuke, becaufe he had penetration enough to difcern that Peregrine's difpolition was impregnable to all fuch attacks; but he first of all rallied him upon his intriguing genius, then, in an humourous manner, defcribed the diffraction . of the poor cuckold, who, he owned, was justly punished for the abfurdity of his conduct; and, laftly, upon the supposition that it would be no great effort in Pickle to part with fuch a conquest, especially after it had been for fome time poffeffed. He reprefented the neceffity and expediency of reftoring her, not only out of regard to his own character, and that of his nation, but alfo with a view to his eafe, which would in a little time be very much invaded by fuch an encumbrance, that in all probability would involve him in a thoufand difficulties and difgusts. Besides, he affured him, that he was already, by order of the lieutenant de police, furrounded with fpies, who would watch all his motions, and immediately difcover the retreat in which he had difpofed of his prize. Thefe arguments, and the frank familiar manner in which they were delivered, but, above all, the laft confideration, induced the young gentleman to difclofe the whole of his proceedings to the ambaffador, and promifed to be governed by his direction, provided the lady fhould not fuffer for the ftep fhe had taken, but be received by her husband with due reverence and respect. These stipulations being agreed to, he undertook to produce her in eight and forty hours; and, taking coach immediately, drove to the place of her refidence, where he fpent a whole day and a night in convincing her of the impoffibility of their enjoying each other in that manner. Then, returning to Paris, he delivered her into the hands of the ambaffador, who, having affured her that fhe might depend upon his friendship and protection, in case she should find herfelf aggrieved by the jealous temper of Mr. Hornbeck, reftored her to her legitimate lord, whom he counfelled to exempt her from that reftraint which in all probability had been the caufe of her elopement, and endeavour to conciliate her affection by tender and respectful usage.

The hufband behaved with great humility and compliance, protesting that his chief study should be to contrive parties for her pleasure and fatisfaction. But no fooner did he regain possession of his stray-sheep, than he locked her up more clofely than ever; and, after having revolved various fchemes for her reformation, determined to board her in a convent, under the infpection of a prudent abbefs, who fhould fuperintend her morals, and recal her to the paths of virtue, which fhe had forfaken. With this view he confulted an English priest of his acquaintance, who advifed him to fettle her in a monastery at Lifle, that fhe might be as far as possible from the machinations of her lover; and gave him a letter of recommendation to the fuperior of a certain convent in that place, for which Mr. Hornbeck fet out in a few days with his troublefome charge.

CHAPTER XLII.

Peregrine refolves to return to England; is diverted with the odd characters of two of his countrymen, with whom he contracts an acquaintance in the apartments of the Palais Royal.

In the mean time, our hero received a letter from his aunt, importing that the commodore was in a very declining way, and longed much to fee him at the garrifon; and, at the fame time, he heard from his fifter, who gave him to underftand, that the young gentleman who had for fome time made his addreffes to her, was become very prefling in his folicitations; fo that fhe wanted to know in what manner fhe fhould anfwer his repeated entreaties. Thefe two confiderations determined the young gentleman to return to his native country, a refolution that was far from being difagreeable to Jolter, who knew that the incumbent on a living which was in the gift of Trunnion, was extremely old, and that it would be his intereft to be upon the fpot at the faid incumbent's deceafe.

Peregrine, who had refided about fifteen months in France, thought he was now fufficiently qualified for eclipting most of his cotemporaries in England, and therefore prepared for his departure with infinite alacrity, being moreover inflamed with the most ardent defire of revisiting his friends, and renewing his connections, particularly with Emilia, whose heart he, by this time, thought he was able to reduce on his own terms.

As he proposed to make the tour of Flanders and Holland in his return to England, he refolved to ftay at Paris a week or two after his affairs were fettled, in hope of finding fome agreeable companion disposed for the fame journey, and, in order to refresh his memory, made a fecond circuit round all the places in that capital, where any curious production of art is to be feen. In the courfe of this fecond examination, he chanced to enter the Palais Royal, just as two gentlemen alighted from a fiacre at the gate, and all three being admitted at the fame time, he foon perceived that the strangers were of his own country. One of them was a young man, in whofe air and countenance appeared all the uncouth gravity and fupercilious felf-conceit of a physician piping hot from his studies; while the other, to whom his companion spoke by the appellation of Mr. Pallet, displayed at first fight a itrange composition of levity and assurance. Indeed their characters, drefs, and addrefs, were ftrongly contraited : The doctor wore a fuit of black, and a huge tie wig, neither fuitable to his own age, nor the fashion of the country where he then lived ; whereas the other, though feemingly turned of fifty, ftrutted in a gay fummer drefs of the Parifian cut, with a bag to his own gray hair, and a red feather in his hat, which he carried under his arm. As these figures seemed to promise something entertaining, Pickle entered into converfation with them immediately, and foon difcovered that the old gentleman was a painter from London, who had ftole a fortnight from his occupation, in order to vifit the remarkable paintings of France and Flanders; and that the doctor had taken the opportunity of accompanying him in his tour. Being extremely talkative, he not only communicated these particulars to our hero in a very few minutes after their meeting, but alfo took occasion to whifper in his ear, that his fellow-traveller was a man of vaft learning, and, beyond all doubt, the greatest poet of the age. As for himfelf, he was under no neceffity of making his own eulogium; for he foon gave fuch specimens of his tafte and talents, as left Pickle no room to doubt of his capacity.

While they flood confidering the pictures in one of the first apartments, which are by no means the most masterly compositions, the Swifs, who fets up for a connoiffeur, looking at a certain piece, pronounced the word Magnifique! with a note of admiration; upon which Mr. Pallet, who was not at all a critic in the French language, replied with great vivacity, " Manufac, you mean, and a very indifferent piece of manufacture it is; pray, gentlemen, take notice, there is no keeping in those heads upon the back ground, nor no relief in the principal figure : Then you'll observe the shadings are harsh to the last degree; and-come a little closer this way-don't you perceive that the fore-fhortening of that arm is monftrous-agad, Sir, there is an absolute fracture in the limb-Doctor, you understand anatomy; don't you think that mufcle evidently mifplaced ? Hark ye, Mr. what d'ye call um (turning to the attendant), what is the name of the dauber who painted that miferable performance?" The Swifs, imagining that he was all this time expreffing his fatisfaction, fanctioned his fuppofed commendation, by exclaiming fans prix. " Right (cried Pallet), I could not recollect his name, though his manner is quite familiar to me. We have a few pieces in England done by that fame Sangpree; but there they are in no effimation;

we have more tafte among us, than to relifh the productions of fuch a miferable gout. A'n't he an ignorant coxcomb, Doctor ?" The phyfician, afhamed of his companion's blunder, thought it was neceffary, for the honour of his own character, to take notice of it before the ftranger, and therefore anfwered his queftion, by repeating this line from Horace,

Mutato nomine, de te fabula narratur.

The painter, who was rather more ignorant of Latin than of French, taking it for granted that this quotation of his friend conveyed an affent to his opinion, " Very true (faid he), Potatoe domine date, This piece is not worth a fingle potatoe." Peregrine was aftonished at this furpriling perversion of the words and meaning of a Latin line, which, at first, he could not help thinking was a premeditated joke; but, upon fecond thoughts, he faw no reason to doubt that it was the extemporaneous effect of theer pertnefs and ignorance, at which he broke out into an immoderate fit of laughter. Pallet, believing that the gentleman's mirth was occafioned by his arch animadversion upon the works of Sangpree, underwent the fame emotion in a much louder strain, and endeavoured to heighten the jest by more observations of the same nature; while the doctor, confounded at his impudence and want of knowledge, reprimanded him in thefe words of Homer :---

Siga me tis allos Achaion touton akoufe muthon.

This rebuke, the reader will eafily perceive, was not calculated for the meridian of his friend's intellects, but uttered with a view of raifing his own character in the opinion of Mr. Pickle, who retorted this parade of learning in three verfes from the fame author, being part of the fpeech of Polydamas to Hector, importing that it is impofible for one man to excel in every thing. The felffufficient phyfician, who did not expect fuch a repartee from a youth of Peregrine's appearance, looked upon his reply as a fair challenge, and inftantly rehearfed forty or fifty lines of the lliad in a breath. Obferving that the ftranger made no effort to match this effusion, he interpreted his filence into fubmiffion; then, in order to af-certain his victory, infulted him with divers fragments of authors, whom his fuppofed competitor did not even know by name; while Mr. Pallet ftared with admiration at the profound fcholarship of his companion. Our young gentleman, far from repining at this superiority, laughed within himfelf at the ridiculous ambition of the pedantic doctor. He rated him in his own mind as a mere indexhunter, who held the eel of fcience by the tail, and forefaw an infinite fund of diversion in his folemnity and pride, if properly extracted by means of his fellow-traveller's vanity and affurance. Prompted by these confiderations, he refolved to cultivate their acquaintance, and, if poffible, amufe himfelf at their expence in his journey through Flanders, understanding that they were determined upon the fame route. In this view he treated them with extraordinary attention, and feemed to pay particular deference to the remarks of the painter, who with great intrepidity pronounced judgment upon every picture in the palace, or, in other words, exposed his own nakednefs, in every fentence that proceeded from his mouth.

When they came to confider the Murder of the Innocents, by Le Brun, the Swifs obferved, that it was un beau morceau; and Mr. Pallet replied, " Yes, yes, one may fee with half an eye, that it can be the production of no other; for Bomorfo's ftyle, both in colouring and drapery, is altogether peculiar; then his defign is tame, and his expression antic and unnatural. Doctor, you have feen my Judgment of Solomon; I think I may, without prefumption-but I don't choose to make comparifons; I leave that odious talk to other people, and let my works speak for themselves. France, to be fure, is rich in the arts; but what is the reafon? The king encourages men of genius with honour and rewards; whereas, in England, we are obliged to ftand upon our own feet, and combat the envy and malice of our brethren-Agad! I have a good mind to come and fettle here in Paris; I should like to have an apartment in the Louvre, with a fnug penfion of fo many thousand livres." In this manner did Pallet proceed with an eternal rotation of tongue, floundering from one miftake to another, until it was the turn of Pouffin's Seven Sacraments to be examined. Here again the Swifs, out of the abundance of his zeal, expressed his admiration, by faving these pieces were impayable ; when the painter, turning to him with an air of exultation, " Pardon me, friend, there you happen to be miftaken; thefe are none of Impayable's, but done by Nicholas Poufeen. I have feen prints of them in England; fo that none of your tricks upon travellers, Mr. Swifs, or Swafh, or what's your name." He was very much elated by this imaginary triumph of his understanding, which animated him to perfevere in his curious obfervations upon all the other pieces of that celebrated collection; but perceiving that the doctor manifested no figns of pleafure and fatisfaction, but rather beheld them with a filent air of difdain, he could not digeft his indifference, and afked, with a waggifh fneer, if ever he had feen fuch a number of mafterpieces before? The phyfician, eyeing him with a look of compaffion, mingled with contempt, obferved, that there was nothing there which deferved the attention of any perion acquainted with the ideas of the ancients; and that the author of the fineft piece now in being was unworthy to clean the brushes of one of those great masters who are celebrated by the Greek and Roman writers. " O lud! O lud! (exclaimed the painter, with a loud laugh), you have fairly brought yourfelf into a dilemma at lait, dear doctor ; for it is well known that your ancient Greek and Roman artifts knew nothing at all of the matter, in comparison with our modern masters; for this good reason, because they had but three or four colours, and knew not how to paint with oil : Befides, which of all your old fufty Grecians would you put upon a footing with the divine Raphael, the most excellent Michael Angelo Bona Roti, the graceful Guido, the bewitching Titian, and, above all others, the fublime Rubens, the"-He would have proceeded with a long catalogue of names which he had got by heart for the purpole, without retaining the least idea of their feveral qualifications, had not he been interrupted by his friend, whole indignation being kindled by the irreverence with which he mentioned the Greeks, he called him blasphemer, Goth, Bœotian, and, in his turn, alked with great vehemence which of those puny moderns could match with Panænus of Athens, and his brother Vol. II. Q

Phidias, Polycletus of Sicyon, Polygnotus the Thrafian. Parrhafius of Ephefus, furnamed Abrodiaitos, or the Beau, and Apelles, the prince of painters? He challenged him to fhow any portrait of these days that could vie with the Helen of Zeuxis the Heraclean, or any composition equal to the facrifice of Iphigenia, by Timanthes the Sicyonian ; not to mention the twelve gods of Afclepiadorus the Athenian, for which Muafon, tyrant of Elatea, gave him about three hundred pounds a-piece; or Homer's hell, by Nicias, who refused fixty talents, amounting to upwards of eleven thousand pounds, and generously made a prefent of it to his own country. He defired him to produce a collection equal to that in the Temple of Delphos, mentioned in the lon of Euripides, where Hercules and his companion Iolaus are reprefented in the act of killing the Lernæan hydra, with golden fickles, krufeais harpais, where Bellerophon appears on his winged fteed, vanquifhing the fire-breathing chimera, tan puripneoufan, and the War of the Giants is defcribed-here Jupiter ftands wielding the red-hot thunderbolt, Keraunon amphipuron; there Pallas, dreadful to the view, Gorgopon, brandifheth her fpear against the huge Enceladus; and Bacchus, with flender ivy rods, defeats and flays the gas teknon, or mighty for of earth. The painter was aftonished and confounded at this rhapfody of names and inflances, which was uttered with furprising eagerness and rapidity, and suspected at first that the whole was the creation of his own brain : But when Pickle, with a view of flattering the doctor's felf-conceit, cfpouled his fide of the queftion, and confirmed the truth of every thing he advanced, Mr. Pallet changed his opinion, and in emphatic filence adored the immenfity of his friend's understanding. In short, Peregrine eatily perceived that they were falfe enthufiafts, without the smallest pretensions to taste and fensibility, and pretended to be in raptures with they knew not what, the one thinking it was encumbent upon him to express transports on feeing the works of those who had been most eminent in his profession, whether they did or did not really raife his admiration; and the other, as a feholar, deeming it his duty to magnify the ancients above all competition, with an affected fervour, which the knowledge of their excellencies never infpired. Indeed, our young gentleman fo fuccefsfully accommodated himfelf to the difpolitions of each, that, long before their review was finished, he was become a particular favourite with both.

From the Palais Royal he accompanied them to the cloifters of the Carthufians, where they confidered the hiftory of St. Bruno, by Le Seur, whofe name being utterly unknown to the painter, he gave judgment againft the whole composition, as pitiful and paltry, though, in the opinion of all good judges, it is a most masterly performance.

Having fatisfied their curiofity in this place, Peregrine asked them to favour him with their company at dinner; but whether out of caution against the infinuations of one whofe character they did not know, or by reafon of a prior engagement, they declined his invitation, on pretence of having an appointment at a certain ordinary, though they expressed a defire of being farther acquainted with him; and Mr. Pallet took the freedom of asking his name, which he not only declared, but promifed, as they were ftrangers in Paris, to wait upon them next day in the forenoon, in order to conduct them to the Hotel de Thouloufe, and the houses of feveral other noblemen, remarkable for paintings or curious furniture. They thankfully embraced his propofal, and that fame day made inquiry among the English gentlemen about the character of our bero, which they found fo much to their fatisfaction, that, upon their fecond meeting, they courted his good graces without referve; and, as they had heard of his intended departure, begged earneftly to have the honour of accompanying him. through the Low Countries. He affured them, that nothing could be more agreeable to him than the profpect of having fuch fellow-travellers; and they immediately appointed a day for fetting out on that tour.

CHAPTER XLIII.

He introduces his new friends to Mr. Jolter, with whom the doctor erters into a diffute upon government, which had well nigh terminated in open war.

MEANWHILE, he not only made them acquainted with every thing worth feeing in town, but attended them in their excursions to all the king's houses within a day's journey of Paris; and, in the courfe of thefe parties, treated them with an elegant dinner at his own apartments, where a difpute arole between the doctor and Mr. Jolter, which had well nigh terminated in an irreconcilable animolity. These gentlemen, with an equal share of pride, pedantry, and faturnine disposition, were, by the accidents of education and company, diametrically oppofite in political maxims; the one, as we have already obferved, being a bigotted high-churchman, and the other a rank republican. It was an article of the governor's creed, that the people could not be happy, nor the earth yield its fruits in abundance, under a reftricted clergy and limited government; whereas, in the doctor's opinion, it was an eternal truth, that no conftitution was fo perfect as the democracy, and that no country could flourish, but under the administration of the mob.

Thefe confiderations being premifed, no wonder that they happened to difagree in the freedom of an unreferved converfation, efpecially as their entertainer took all opportunities of encouraging and inflaming the contention. The firft fource of their difference was an unlucky remark of the painter, who obferved that the partridge, of which he was then eating, had the fineft relift of any he had ever tafted. His friend owned that the birds were the beft of the kind he had feen in France; but affirmed that they were neither fo plump nor delicious as thofe that were caught in England.—The governor, confidering this obfervation as the effect of prejudice and inexperience, faid, with a farcaftical finile, "I believe, Sir, you are very well difposed to find every thing here inferior to the productions of your own country." " True, Sir, (anfwered the phyfician, with a certain folennity of afpect), and not without good reason, I hope." " And pray (refumed the tutor), why may not the partridges of France be as good as those of England?" "For a very plain reason (replied the other), because they are not so well fed. The iron hand of oppression is extended to all animals within the French dominions, even to the beafts of the field and the fowls of the air. Kuneffin cionoifi te pafi." "Egad ! (cried the painter) that is a truth not to be controverted; for my own part, I am none of your tit-bits, one would think, but yet there's a freshuefs in the English complexion, a ginfeckye, I think you call it, fo inviting to a hungry Frenchman, that I have caught feveral in the very act of viewing me with an eye of extreme appetite as I paffed ; and as for their curs, or rather their wolves, whenever I fet eyes on one of 'em, Ah ! your humble fervant, Mr. fon of a bitch; I am upon my guard in an inftant. The doctor can teftify that their very horfes, or more properly their live carrion, that drew our chaife, ufed to reach back their long necks, and fmell at us, as a couple of delicious morfels." This fally of Mr. Pallet, which was received with a general laugh of approbation, would, in all probability, have ftifled the difpute in embryo, had not Mr. Jolter, with a felf-applauding fimper, ironically complimented the ftrangers on their talking like true Englishmen. The doctor, affronted at the infinuation, told him, with fome warmth, that he was miftaken in his conjecture, his affections and ideas being confined to no particular country; for he confidered himfelf as a citizen of the world. He owned himfelf more attached to England than to any other kingdom, but this preference was the effect of reflection, and not of prejudice ; becaufe the British constitution approached nearer than any other to that perfection of government, the democracy of Athens, which he hoped one day to fee revived : He mentioned the death of Charles the First, and the expulsion of his fon, with raptures of applause; inveighed with great acrimony against the kingly name; and, in order to strengthen his opinion, repeated forty or fifty lines from one of the Philippicks of Demofthenes. Jolter, hearing him speak fo distrespectfully of the higher powers, glowed with indignation. He faid his dectrines were deteftable, and deftiuctive of all right, order, and fociety; that monarchy was of divine inftitution, ther,...

fore indefealible by any human power; and, of confequence, those events in the English history, which he had fo liberally commended, were no other than flagrant inftances of facrilege, perfidy, and fedition; that the democracy of Athens was a most abfurd constitution, productive of anarchy and mifchief, which muft always happen when the government of a nation depends upon the caprice of the ignorant hair-brained vulgar; that it was in the power of the most profligate member of the commonwealth, provided he was endowed with eloquence, to ruin the most deferving, by a desperate exertion of his talents upon the populace, who had been often perfuaded to act in the most ungrateful and imprudent manner against the greatest patriots that their country had produced; and, finally, he averred, that the liberal arts and feiences had never flourished fo much in a republic as under the encouragement and protection of abfolute power; witnels the Augustan age, and the reign of Lewis the Fourteenth ; nor was it to be fuppofed that genius and merit could ever be fo amply recompenfed by the individuals, or diffracted councils of a commonwealth, as by the generofity and magnificence of one who had the whole treafures at his own command.

Peregrine, who was pleafed to find the contest grow warm, obferved that there feemed to be a good deal of truth in what Mr. Jolter advanced; and the painter, whole opinion began to waver, looked with a face of expectation at his friend, who, modelling his features into an expression of exulting difdain, asked of his antagonist, if he did not think that very power of rewarding merit enabled an abfolute prince to indulge himfelf in the moft arbitrary licenfe over the lives and fortunes of his people? Before the governor had time to answer this question, Pallet broke forth into an exclamation of "By the Lord! that is certainly fact, egad ! that was a home-thruft, doctor." When Mr. Jolter, chaftifing this fhallow intruder with a contemptuous look, affirmed, that though fupreme power furnished a good prince with the means of exerting his virtues, it would not fupport a tyrant in the exercife of cruelty and oppreffion; becaufe in all nations the genius of the people must be confulted by their governors, and the burden proportioned to the shoulders on which it is laid .- " Elfe, what follows ?" (faid the phyfician). "The confequence is plain (replied the governor), infurrection, revolt, and his own destruction; for it is not to be fuppofed that the fubjects of any nation would be fo abject and pufillanimous as to neglect the means which Heaven had put in their power for their own prefervation." "Gadzooks, you're in the right, Sir (cried Pallet), that I grant you must be confessed; Doctor, I'm afraid we have got into the wrong box." This fon of Pæan, however, far from being of his friend's opinion, obferved, with an air of triumph, that he would not only demonstrate the fophistry of the gentleman's last allegation by arguments and facts, but even confute him with his own words. Jolter's eyes kindling at this prefumptuous declaration, he told his antagonist, while his hp quivered with refentment, that, if his arguments were no better than his breeding, he was fure he would make very few converts to his opinion ; and the doctor, with all the infolence of triumph, advifed him to beware of difputes for the future, until he fhould have made himfelf more master of his fubject.

Peregrine both wifhed and hoped to fee the difputants proceed to arguments of more weight and conviction; and the painter, dreading the fame iffue, interpofed with the ufual exclamation of "For God's fake, gentlemen !" when the governor role from table in great dudgeon, and left the room, muttering fome ejaculation, of which the word coxcomb only could be diffinctly heard. The phyfician, being thus left mafter of the field of battle, was complimented on his victory by Peregrine, and fo elevated by his fuccefs, that he declaimed a full hour on the abfurdity of Jolter's proposition, and the beauty of the democratic administration; canvaffed the whole scheme of Plato's republic, with many quotations from that ideal author, touching the to kalon; from thence he made a transition to the moral fense of Shaftesbury, and concluded his harangue with the greatest part of that frothy writer's rhapfody, which he repeated with all the violence of enthufiastic agitation, to the unspeakable fatisfaction of his entertainer, and the unutterable admiration of Pallet, who looked upon him as fomething fupernatural and divine. So intoxicated was this vain young man with the Q iiij ironical praifes of Pickle, that he forthwith thook off all referve, and, having professed a friendship for our hero, whofe tafte and learning he did not fail to extol, intimated, in plain terms, that he was the only perfon in thefe latter ages who poffeffed that fublime genius, that portion of the divinity of Ti Theion, which immortalized the Grecian poets; that as Pythagoras affirmed the fpirit of Euphorbus had traufmigrated into his body, he, the doctor, was ftrangely poffeffed with the opinion that he himfelf was infpired by the foul of Pindar; becaufe, making allowance for the difference of languages in which they wrote, there was a furprifing affinity between his own works and those of that celebrated Theban; and, as a confirmation of this truth, he immediately produced a fample of each, which, though in fpirit and vertification as different as the Odes of Horace and our prefent Poet Laureat, Peregrine did not fcruple to pronounce altogether congenial, notwithstanding the violence he by this fentence offered to his own confeience, and a certain alarm of his pride, that was weak enough to be diffurbed by the phyfician's ridiculous vanity and prefumption, which, not contented with difplaying his importance in the world of tafte and polite literature, manifested itself in arrogating certain material discoveries in the province of physic, which could not fail to advance him to the highest pinnacle of that profession, confidering the recommendation of his other talents, together with a liberal fortune which he inherited from his father.

CHAPTER XLIV.

The doctor prepares an entertainment in the manner of the ancients, which is attended with divers ridiculous circumstances.

In a word, our young gentleman, by his infinuating behaviour, acquired the full confidence of the doctor, who invited him to an entertainment, which he intended to prepare in the manner of the ancients.—Pickle, ftruck with this idea, eagerly embraced the propofal, which he honoured with many encomiums, as a plan in all refpects worthy of his genius and apprehension; and the day was appointed at fome distance of time, that the treater might have leifure to compose certain pickles and confections, which were not to be found among the culinary preparations of these degenerate days.

With a view of rendering the phyfician's tafte more confpicuous, and extracting from it the more diversion, Peregrine proposed that some foreigners should partake of the banquet; and the task being left to his care and difcretion, he actually bespoke the company of a French marquis, an Italian count, and a German baron, whom he knew to be egregious coxcombs, and therefore more likely to enhance the joy of the entertainment.

Accordingly, the hour being arrived, he conducted them to the hotel where the phyfician lodged, after having regaled their expectations with an elegant meal in the genuine old Roman tafte; and they were received by Mr. Pallet, who did the honours of the house, while his friend fuperintended the cook below. By this communicative painter, the gueits understood that the doctor had met with numerous difficulties in the execution of his defign; that no fewer than five cooks had been difmiffed, becaufe they could not prevail upon their own confciences to obey his directions in things that were contrary to the prefent practice of their art; and that although he had at laft engaged a perfon, by an extraordinary premium, to comply with his orders, the fellow was fo aftonished, mortified, and incenfed at the commands he had received, that his hair flood on end, and he begged, on his knees, to be releafed from the agreement he had made; but finding that his employer infifted upon the performance of his contract, and threatened to introduce him to the commiffaire, if he should flinch from the bargain, he had, in the difcharge of his office, wept, fung, curfed, and capered, for two whole hours without intermiffion.

While the company liftened to this odd information, by which they were prepoficified with firange notions of the dinner, their ears were invaded by a piteous voice, that exclaimed in French, "For the love of God! dear Sir! for the paffion of Jefus Chrift! fpare me the mortification of the honey and oil!" Their ears ftill vibrated with the found, when the doctor entering, was by Peregrine made acquainted with the ftrangers, to whom he. in the transports of his wrath, could not help complaining of the want of complaifance he had found in the Parifian vulgar, by which his plan had been almost entirely ruined and fet afide. The French marguis, who thought the honour of his nation was concerned at this declaration, profetfed his forrow for what had happened, fo contrary to the established character of the people, and undertook to fee the delinquents feverely punished, provided he could be informed of their names or places of abode. The mutual compliments that paffed on this occafion were fcarce finished, when a fervant, coming into the room, announced dinner; and the entertainer led the way into another apartment, where they found a long table, or rather two boards joined together, and furnished with a variety of diffies, the fleams of which had fuch evident effect upon the nerves of the company, that the marquis made frightful grimaces, under pretence of taking fouff; the Italian's eyes watered, the German's vifage underwent feveral diffortions of feature; our hero found means to exclude the odour from his fenfe of fmelling, by breathing only through his mouth ; and the poor painter, running into another room, plugged his noftrils with tobacco. The doctor himfelf, who was the only perfon then prefent whole organs were not difcompoled, pointing to a couple of couches placed on each fide of the table, told his guests that he was forry he could not procure the exact triclinia of the ancients, which were fomewhat different from thefe conveniencies, and defired they would have the goodnefs to repofe themfelves without ceremony, each in his refpective couchette, while he and his friend Mr. Pallet would place themfelves upright at the ends, that they might have the pleafure of ferving those that lay along. This disposition, of which the ftrangers had no previous idea, difconcerted and perplexed them in a most ridiculous manner; the marquis and baron flood bowing to each other, on pretence of difputing the lower feat, but in reality with a view of profiting by the example of each other, for neither of them underflood the manner in which they were to loll; and Peregrine, who enjoyed their confusion, handed the count to the other fide, where, with the most mischievous politenefs, he infifted upon his taking poffettion of the upper place.

In this difagreeable and ludicrous fufpenfe, they continued acting a pantomime of gesticulations, until the doctor earneftly entreated them to wave all compliment and form, left the dinner should be spoiled before the ceremonial could be adjusted. Thus conjured, Peregrine took the lower couch on the left-hand fide, laying himfelf gently down, with his face towards the table. The marquis, in imitation of this pattern (though he would have much rather fasted three days than run the risk of difcomposing his drefs by fuch an attitude), ftretched himfelf upon the oppofite place, reclining upon his elbow in a most painful and awkward fituation, with his head raifed above the end of the couch, that the economy of his hair might not fuffer by the projection of his body. The Italian, being a thin limber creature, planted himfelf next to Pickle, without fuftaining any misfortune, but that of his flocking being torn by a ragged nail of the feat, as he raifed his legs on a level with the reft of his limbs. But the baron, who was neither fo weildy nor fupple in his joints as his companions, flounced himfelf down with fuch precipitation, that his feet, fuddenly tilting up, came in furious contact with the head of the marquis, and demolished every curl in a twinkling, while his own skull, at the fame instant, descended upon the fide of his couch with fuch violence, that his periwig was ftruck off, and the whole room filled with pulvilio.

The drollery of diftrefs that attended this difafter entirely vanquifhed the affected gravity of our young gentleman, who was obliged to fupprefs his laughter by cramming his handkerchief in his mouth; for the bareheaded German afked pardon with fuch ridiculous confusion, and the marquis admitted his apology with fuch rueful complaifance, as were fufficient to awake the mirth of a Quietift.

This misfortune being repaired as well as the circumftances of the occafion would permit, and every one fettled according to the arrangement already defcribed, the doctor gracioufly undertook to give fome account of the diffuse as they occurred, that the company might be directed in their choice; and, with an air of infinite fatisfaction, thus began,-" This here, gentlemen, is a boiled goofe, ferved up in a fauce composed of pepper, lovage, coriander, mint, rue, anchovies, and oil! I with, for your fakes, gentlemen, it was one of the geefe of Ferrara, fo much celebrated among the ancients for the magnitude of their livers, one of which is faid to have weighed upwards of two pounds; with this food, exquifite as it was, did the tyrant Heliogabulus regale his hounds. But I beg pardon, I had almost forgot the foup, which I hear is fo neceffary an article at all tables in France. At each end there are diffies of the falacacabia of the Romans; one is made of parfley, pennyroyal, cheefe, pine-tops, honey, vinegar, brine, eggs, cucumbers, onions, and hen livers; the other is much the fame as the foup-maigre of this country. Then there is a loin of boiled yeal with fennel and carraway feed, on a pottage composed of pickle, oil, honey, and flour, and a curious hashis of the lights, liver, and blood of a hare, together with a difh of roafted pigeons. Monfieur le Baron, fhall I help you to a plate of this foup ?" The German, who did not at all difapprove of the ingredients, affented to the propofal, and feemed to relifh the composition; while the marguis being afked by the painter which of the filly-kickabys he chofe, was, in confequence of his defire, accommodated with a portion of the foup-maigre; and the count, in lieu of spoon meat, of which he faid he was no great admirer, fupplied himfelf with a pigeon, therein conforming to the choice of our young gentleman, whole example he determined to follow through the whole courfe of the entertainment.

The Frenchman having fwallowed the first fpoonful, made a full pause, his throat swelled as if an egg had struck in his gullet, his eyes rolled, and his mouth underwent a feries of involuntary contractions and dilatations. Pallet, who looked stedfassly at this connoisseur, with a view of confulting his tasse, before he himself would venture upon the soup, began to be disturbed at these emotions, and observed, with some concern, that the poor gentleman seemed to be going into a fit; when Peregrine assured him, that these were symptoms of ecstasy, and, for further confirmation, asked the marguis how he found the foup. It was with infinite difficulty that his complaifance could fo far mafter his difguft, as to enable him to anfwer, "Altogether excellent, upon my honour !" And the painter being certified of his approbation, lifted the fpoon to his mouth without feruple; but far from juftifying the eulogium of his tafter, when this precious compolition diffufed itfelf upon his palate, he feemed to be deprived of all fenfe and motion, and fat like the leaden flatue of fome river god, with the liquor flowing out at both fides of his mouth.

The doctor, alarmed at this indecent phenomenon, earnestly inquired into the cause of it; and when Pallet recovered his recollection, and fwore that he would rather fwallow porridge made of burning brimftone than fuch an infernal mefs as that which he had tafted, the phyfician, in his own vindication, affured the company, that, except the ufual ingredients, he had mixed nothing in the foup but fome fal-amoniac, instead of the ancient nitrum, which could not now be procured; and appealed to the marquis, whether fuch'a fuccedaneum was not an improvement on the whole. The unfortunate petitmaitre, driven to the extremity of his condescention, acknowledged it to be a mafterly refinement; and deeming himself obliged, in point of honour, to evince his fentiments by his practice, forced a few more mouthfuls of this difagreeable potion down his throat, till his ftomach was fo much offended, that he was compelled to fart up of a fudden; and, in the hurry of his elevation, overturned his plate into the bosom of the baron. The emergency of his occasions would not permit him to ftay and make apologies for this abrupt behaviour; fo that he flew into another apartment, where Pickle found him puking, and croffing himfelf with great devotion; and a chair, at his defire, being brought to the door, he flipped into it more dead than alive, conjuring his friend Pickle to make his peace with the company, and in particular excufe him to the baron, on account of the violent fit of illnefs with which he had been feized. It was not without reafon that he employed a mediator; for when our hero returned to the dining-room, the German got up, and was under the hands of his own lacquey, who wiped the greefe from a rich embroidered waiftcoat, while he, almoft frantic with his misfortune, ftamped upon the ground, and in High Dutch curfed the unlucky banquet, and the impertinent entertainer, who, all this time, with great deliberation, confoled him for the difafter, by affuring him, that the damage might be repaired with fome oil of turpentine and a hot iron. Peregrine, who could fcarce refrain from laughing in his face, appealed his indignation, by telling him how much the whole company, and efpecially the marquis, was mortified at the accident; and the unhappy falacacabia being removed, the places were filled with two pyes, one of dormice liquored with fyrup of white poppies, which the doctor had fubftituted in the room of toafted poppy-feed, formerly eaten with honey, as a defert; and the other compofed of an hock of pork baked in honey.

Pallet hearing the first of these dishes described, lifted up his hands and eyes, and, with figns of loathing and amazement, pronounced, " A pye made of dormice and fyrup of poppies: Lord in heaven! what beaftly fellows those Romans were !" His friend checked him for his irreverent exclamation with a fevere look, and recommended the veal, of which he himfelf cheerfully ate, with fuch encomiums to the company, that the baron refolved to imitate his example, after having called for a bumper of Burgundy, which the physician, for his fake, withed to have been the true wine of Falernum. The painter, fee-· ing nothing elfe upon the table which he would venture to touch, made a merit of necessity, and had recourse to the yeal alfo; although he could not help faying, that he would not give one flice of the roaft beef of Old England for all the dainties of a Roman emperor's table. But all the doctor's invitations and affurances could not prevail upon his guefts to honour the hathis and the goofe; and that courfe was fucceeded by another, in which he told them were divers of those diffues, which, among the ancients, had obtained the appellation of politeles, or magnificent. " That which fmokes in the middle (faid he) is a fow's ftomach, filled with a composition of minced pork, hog's brains, eggs, pepper, cloves, garlic, annifeed, rue, ginger, oil, wine, and pickle. On the right-hand fide are the teats and belly of a fow, just farrowed, fried with fweet wine, oil, flour, loyage, and pepper. On the left is a fricaffee of finails, fed, or rather purged, with milk. At that end next Mr. Pallet are fritters of pompions, lovage, origanum, and oil; and here are a couple of pullets, roafted and ftuffed in the manner of Appicius."

The painter, who had by wry faces teftified his abhorrence of the fow's ftomach, which he compared to a bagpipe, and the fnails which had undergone purgation, no fooner heard him mention the roafted pullets, than he eagerly folicited a wing of the fowl; upon which the doctor defired he would take the trouble of cutting them up, and accordingly fent them round, while Mr. Pallet tucked the table-cloth under his chin, and brandifhed his knife and fork with fingular addrefs; but fcarce were they fet down before him, when the tears ran down his cheeks, and he called aloud, in a manifest diforder, " Z-ds ! this is the effence of a whole bed of garlic !" That he might not, however, disappoint or disgrace the entertainer, he applied his inftruments to one of the birds; and, when he opened up the cavity, was affaulted by fuch an irruption of intolerable finells, that, without ftaying to difengage himfelf from the cloth, he fprung away, with an exclamation of, " Lord Jefus !" and involved the whole table in havock, ruin, and confusion.

Before Pickle could accomplifh his efcape, he was fauced with a fyrup of the dormice pye, which went to pieces in the general wreck: and as for the Italian count, he was overwhelmed by the fow's ftomach, which, burlting in the fall, difcharged its contents upon his leg and thigh, and fealded him fo miferably, that he fhrieked with anguifh, and grinned with a molt ghaftly and horrible afpect.

The baron, who fat fecure without the vortex of this tumult, was not at all difpleafed at feeing his companions involved in fuch a calamity as that which he had already fhared; but the doctor was confounded with fhame and vexation. After having preferibed an application of oil to the count's leg, he expressed his forrow for the misadventure, which he openly afcribed to want of tafte and prudence in the painter, who did not think proper to return, and make an apology in perfon; and projected that there was nothing in the fowls which could give offence to a fenfible nofe, the fluffing being a mixture of pepper, lovage, and affafætida, and the fauce confifting of wine and herring-pickle, which he had ufed inftead of the celebrated garum of the Romans; that famous pickle having been prepared fometimes of the flombri, which were a fort of tunny fifh, and fometimes of the flurus, or fhad fifh; nay, he obferved that there was a third kind called garum hamation, made of the guts, gills, and blood of the thynnus.

The phyfician, finding it would be impracticable to reeftablifh the order of the banquet, by prefenting again the diffuse which had been difcomposed, ordered every thing to be removed, a clean cloth to be laid, and the defert to be brought in.

Meanwhile, he regretted his incapacity to give them a fpecimen of the alieus, or fifh-mcals of the ancients, fuch as the jus diabaton, the conger-eel, which, in Galen's opinion, is hard of digeftion, the cornuta or gurnard, deferibed by Pliny in his Natural Hiftory, who fays, the horns of many of them were a foot and a half in length; the mullet and lamprey, that were in the higheft effimation of old, of which laft Julius Cæfar borrowed fix thoufand for one triumphal fupper. He obferved, that the manner of dreffing them was deferibed by Horace, in the account he gives of the entertainment to which Mæcenas was invited by the epicure Nafiedenus, and told them, that they were commonly eaten with the tbus Syriacum, a certain anodyne and aftringent feed, which qualified the purgative nature of the fifth. Finally, this learned phyfician gave them to underftand, that, though this was reckoned a luxurious difh in the zenith of the Roman tafte, it was by no means comparable, in point of expence, to fome preparations in vogue about the time of that abfurd voluptuary Heliogabalus, who ordered the brains of fix hundred oftriches to be compounded in one mefs.

Affertur squillos inter Murena natantes, &c.

By this time the defert appeared, and the company were not a little rejoiced to fee plain olives in falt and water: But what the mafter of the feaft valued himfelf upon was, a fort of jelly, which he affirmed to be preferable to the bypotrimma of Hefychius, being a mixture of vinegar, pickle, and honey, boiled to a proper confiftence, and candied affafætida, which he afferted, in con-tradiction to Aumelbergius and Lifter, was no other than the lafer Syriacum, fo precious as to be fold among the ancients to the weight of a filver penny. The gentle-men took his word for the excellency of this gum, but contented themfelves with the olives, which gave fuch an agreeable relifh to the wine, that they feemed very well difpofed to confole themfelves for the difgraces they had endured; and Pickle, unwilling to lofe the leaft circumftance of entertainment that could be enjoyed in their company, went in quest of the painter, who remained in his penitentials in another apartment, and could not be perfuaded to re-enter the banqueting room, until Peregrine undertook to procure his pardon from those whom he had injured. Having affured him of this indulgence, our young gentleman led him in like a criminal, bowing on all hands with an air of humility and contrition; and particularly addreffing himfelf to the count, to whom he fwore in English, as God was his Saviour, he had no intent to affront man, woman, or child; but was fain to make the best of his way, that he might not give the honourable company caufe of offence, by obeying the dictates of nature in their prefence.

When Pickle interpreted this apology to the Italian, Pallet was forgiven in very polite terms, and even received into favour by his friend the doctor, in confequence of our hero's interceffion; fo that all the gueits forgot their chagrin, and paid their refpects fo pioufly to the bottle, that, in a flort time, the champaign produced very evident effects in the behaviour of all prefent.

CHAPTER XLV.

L HE painter, at the requeft of Pickle, who had a defign upon the count's fenfe of hearing, favoured the company Vol. II. R

The painter is perfuaded to accompany Pickle to a mafquerade in woman's apparel; i engaged in a troublefome adventure, and, with his companion, conveyed to the Baftile.

with the fong of Bumper Squire Jones, which yielded infinite fatisfaction to the baron; but affected the delicate ears of the Italian in fuch a manner, that his features exprefied aftonifhment and difquiet; and, by his fudden and repeated journeys to the door, it plainly appeared that he was in the fame predicament with those who, as Shakspeare observes, when the bagpipe sings in the nose, cannot contain their urine for affection.

With a view, therefore, of vindicating mulic from fuch a barbarous tafte, Mr. Pallet had no fooner performed his tafk, than the count honoured his friends with fome favourite airs of his own country, which he warbled with infinite grace and expression, though they had not energy fufficient to engage the attention of the German, who fell fast asleep upon his couch, and fnored fo loud as to interrupt, and totally annul this ravishing entertainment; fo that they were fain to have recourfe again to the glafs, which made fuch innovation upon the brain of the phyfician, that he fung divers odes of Anacreon, to a tune of his own composing, and held forth upon the mulic and recitative of the ancients with great erudition; while Pallet, having found means to make the Italian acquainted with the nature of his profession, harangued upon painting with wonderful volubility, in a language which (it was well for his own credit) the ftranger did not understand.

At length the doctor was feized with fuch a qualm, that he begged Peregrine to lead him to his chamber; and the baron being waked, retired with the count.

Peregrine, being rendered frolickfome with the wine he had drank, propofed that he and Pallet fhould go to a mafquerade, which he recollected was to be given that night. The painter did not want curiofity and inclination to accompany him, but expreffed his apprehenfion of lofing him in the ball, an accident which could not fail to be very difagreeable, as he was an utter ftranger to the language and the town. To obviate this objection, the landlady, who was of their counfel, advifed him to appear in a woman's drefs, which would lay his companion under the neceffity of attending him with more care, as he could not, with decency, detach himfelf from the lady whom he fhould introduce; befides, fuch a fuppofed connection would hinder the ladies of pleafure from accofting and employing their feducing arts upon a perfon already engaged.

Our young gentleman, forefeeing the abundance of diverfion in the execution of this project, feconded the propofal with fuch importunity and addrefs, that the painter allowed himfelf to be habited in a fuit belonging to the landlady, who alfo procured for him a mafk and domino, while Pickle provided himfelf with a Spanifh drefs. In this difguife, which they put on about eleven o'clock, did they, attended by Pipes, fet out in a fiacre for the ball room, into which Pickle led this fuppofititious female, to the aftonifhment of the whole company, who had never feen fuch an uncouth figure in the appearance of a woman.

After they had taken a view of all the remarkable maſks, and the painter had been treated with a glaſs of liquor, his miſchievous companion gave him the flip, and vaniſhing in an inſtant, returned with another maſk and a domino over his habit, that hc might enjoy Pallet's perplexity, and be at hand to protect him from inſult.

The poor painter, having loft his guide, was almost diffracted with anxiety, and ftalked about the room in queft of him, with fuch huge ftrides and oddity of gefture, that he was followed by a whole multitude, who gazed at him as a preternatural phenomenon. This attendance increased his uneasiness to fuch a degree, that he could not help uttering a foliloquy aloud, in which he curfed his fate for having depended upon the promife of fuch a wag; and fwore, that, if once he was clear of this fcrape, he would not bring himself into fuch a premunire again for the whole kingdom of France.

Divers petit-maitres understanding the masque was a foreigner, who, in all probability, could not speak French, made up to him in their turns, in order to display their wit and address, and teased him with several arch queflions, to which he made no other answer than, "No parly Francy. Damn your chattering !--Go about your business, can't ye ?" Among the masks was a nobleman, who began to be very free with the supposed lady, and attempted to plunge his hand into her boson: But the painter was too modelt to suffer such indecent treatment; and, when the gallant repeated his efforts in a manner ftill more indelicate, lent him fuch a box on the ear, as made the lights dance before him, and created fuch a fufpicion of Pallet's fex, that the Frenchman fwore he was either a male or hermaphrodite, and infifted upon a fcrutiny, for the fake of his own honour, with fuch ob ftinacy of refentment, that the fictitious nymph was in imminent danger, not only of being exposed, but alfo of undergoing fevere chaftifement, for having made fo free with the prince's ear; when Peregrine, who faw and overheard every thing that paffed, thought it was high time to interpofe; and accordingly afferted his pretentions to the infulted lady, who was overjoyed at this proof of his protection.

The affronted gallant perfevered in demanding to know who fhe was, and our hero as ftrenuoufly refufed to give him that fatisfaction : fo that high words enfued; and the prince threatening to punifh his infolence, the young gentleman, who was not fuppofed to know his quality, pointed to the place where his own fword ufed to hang; and fnapping his fingers in his face, laid hold on the painter's arm, and led him to another part of the room, leaving his antagonift to the meditations of his own revenge.

Pallet, having chid his conductor for his barbarous defertion, made him acquainted with the difficulty in which he had been involved, and flatly telling him he would not put it in his power to give him the flip again, held faft by his arm during the remaining part of the entertainment, to the no fmall diversion of the company, whofe attention was altogether engroffed in the contemplation of fuch an awkward, ungainly, ftalking apparition. At laft, Pickle being tired of exhibiting this raree-flow, complied with the repeated defires of his companion, and handed her into the coach; which he himfelf had no fooner entered, than they were furrounded by a file of mufketeers, commanded by an exempt, who, ordering the coach-door to be opened, took his place with great deliberation, while one of his detachment mounted the box, in order to direct the driver.

Peregrine at once conceived the meaning of this arreft, and it was well for him he had no weapon wherewith to ftand upon his defence; for fuch was the impetuofity and rashness of his temper, that, had he been armed, he would have run all rifks rather than furrender himfelf to any odds whatever ; but Pallet imagining that the officer was fome gentleman who had miftaken their carriage for his own, defired his friend to undeceive the ftranger; and, when he was informed of the real ftate of their condition, his knees began to fhake, his teeth to chatter, and he uttered a most doleful lamentation, importing his fear of being carried to fome hideous dungeon of the Baftile, where he fhould fpend the reft of his days in mifery and horror, and never fee the light of God's fun, nor the face of a friend, but perish in a foreign land, far removed from his family and connections. Pickle damned him for his pufillanimity; and the exempt hearing a lady bemoan herfelf fo piteoufly, expressed his mortification at being the inftrument of giving her fuch pain, and endeavoured to confole them, by reprefenting the lenity of the French government, and the fingular generofity of the prince, by whofe order they were apprehended.

Peregrine, whofe difcretion feemed to forfake him on all fuch occasions, exclaimed with great bitternefs against the arbitrary administration of France, and inveighed, with many expressions of contempt, against the character of the offended prince, whofe refentment (far from being noble, he faid) was pitiful, ungenerous, and unjuft. To this remonstrance the officer made no reply, but shrugged up his shoulders in filent astonishment at the hardieffe of the prisoner, and the fiacre was just on the point of fetting out, when they heard the noife of a fcuffle at the back of the coach, and the voice of Tom Pipes pronouncing, " I'll be damn'd if I do." This trufty attendant had been defired by one of the guard to defcend from his ftation in the rear, but, as he refolved to fhare his mafter's fate, he took no notice of their entreaties, until they were feconded by force; and that he endeavoured to repel with his heel, which he applied with fuch energy to the jaws of the foldier who first came in contact with him, that they emitted a crashing found like a dried walnut between the grinders of a templar in the pit. Exasperated at this outrage, the other faluted Tom's posteriors with his bayonet, which incommoded him fo much, that he could no longer keep his poft, but leaping upon the ground, gave Riij his antagonift a chuck under the chin, which laid him upon his back, and then fkipping over him with infinite agility, abfconded among the crowd of coaches, till he faw the guard mount before and behind upon his mafter's fiacre, which no fooner fet forward than he followed at a fmall diffance, to reconnoitie the place where Peregrine fheuld be confined.

After having proceeded flowly through many windings and turnings, to a part of Paris in which Pipes was an utter ftranger, the coach ftopped at a great gate, with a wicket in the middle, which being opened at the approach of the carriage, the prifoners were admitted; and the guard returning with the fiacre, Tom determined to watch in that place all night, that in the morning he might make fuch observations as might be conducive to the enlargement of his mafter.

CHAPTER XLVI.

By the fidelity of Pipes, Jolter is informed of his pupil's fate. Confers with the phylician. Applies to the ambaffador, who, with great difficulty, obtains the difcharge of the priloners, on certain conditions.

I HIS plan he executed, notwithstanding the pain of his wound, and the questions of the city guard both horfe and foot, to which he could make no other answer than " Anglois, Anglois;" and as foon as it was light, taking an accurate furvey of the caftle (for fuch it feemed to be) into which Peregrine and Pallet had been conveyed, together with its fituation in respect to the river, he went home to their lodgings, and waking Mr. Jolter, gave him an account of the adventure. The governor wrung his hands in the utmost grief and consternation, when he heard this unfortunate piece of news; he did not doubt that his pupil was imprifoned in the Baftile for life; and, in the anguish of his apprehension, curfed the day on which he had undertaken to fuperintend the conduct of fuch an imprudent young man, who had, by reiterated infults, provoked the vengeance of fuch a mild forbearing administration. That he might not, however, neglect any means in his power to extricate him from his prefent misfortune, he defpatched Thomas to the doctor, with an account of his companion's fate, that they might join their interest in behalf of the captives; and the physician being informed of what had happened, immediately dreffed himfelf, and repaired to Jolter, whom he accosted in thefe words : " Now, Sir, I hope you are convinced of your error, in afferting, that oppreffion can never be the effect of arbitrary power. Such a calamity as this could never have happened under the Athenian democracy: Nay, even when the tyrant Pififtratus got poffeffion of that commonwealth, he durst not venture to rule with fuch abfolute and unjust dominion. You shall fee now that Mr. Pickle and my friend Pallet will fall a facrifice to the tyranny of lawless power; and, in my opinion, we shall be accessary to the ruin of this poor enflaved people, if we beftir ourfelves in demanding or imploring the release of our unhappy countrymen; as we may thereby prevent the commission of a flagrant crime, which would fill up the vengeance of Heaven against the perpetrators, and perhaps be the means of reftoring a whole nation to the unfpeakable fruition of freedom. For my own part, I fhould rejoice to fee the blood of my father fpilt in fuch a glorious caufe, provided fuch a victim would furnish me with the opportunity of diffolving the chains of flavery, and vindicating that liberty which is the birth-right of man. Then would my name be immortalized among the patriot heroes of antiquity, and my memory, like that of Harmodius and Ariftogiton, be honoured by flatues erected at the public expence." This rhapfody, which was delivered with great emphasis and agitation, gave fo much offence to Jolter, that, without fpeaking one word, he retired in great wrath to his own chamber, and the republican returned to his lodging, in full hope of his prognoftic being verified in the death and destruction of Peregrine and the painter, which must give rife to fome renowned revolution, wherein he himfelf would act a principal part. But the governor, whofe imagination was not quite fo warm and prolific, went directly to the ambaffador, whom he informed of his pupil's fituation, and befought to interpofe with the French R iiij miniftry, that he and the other British subject might obtain their liberty.

His excellency afked if Jolter could guefs at the caufe of his impriforment, that he might be the better prepared to vindicate or excufe his conduct ; but neither he nor Pipes could give the fmalleft hint of intelligence on that fubject; though he furnished himself from Tom's own mouth with a circumftantial account of the manner in which his mafter had been arrefted, as well as of his own behaviour, and the difaster he had received on that occafion. His Lordfhip never doubted that Pickle had brought this calamity upon himfelf by fome unlucky prank he had played at the mafquerade; especially when he understood that the young gentleman had drank freely in the afternoon, and been fo whimfical as to go thither with a man in woman's apparel; and hc, that fame day, waited on the French minister, in full confidence of obtaining his difcharge; but met with more difficulty than he expected, the court of France being extremely punctilious in every thing that concerns a prince of the blood : The ambaffador was therefore obliged to talk in very high terms; and though the prefent circumstances of the French politics would not allow them to fall out with the British administration for trifles, all the favour he could procure, was a promife that Pickle fhould be fet at liberty, provided he would afk pardon of the prince to whom he had given offence. His excellency thought this was but a reafonable condefcention, fuppoling Peregrine to have been in the wrong; and Jolter was admitted to him, in order to communicate and reinforce his lordfhip's advice, which was, that he fhould comply with the terms propofed. The governor, who did not enter this gloomy fortrefs without fear and trembling, found his pupil in a difmal apartment, void of all furniture, but a ftool and truckle-bed; the moment he was admitted, he perceived the youth whiftling with great unconcern, and working with his pencil at the bare wall, on which he had delineated a ludicrous figure, labelled with the name of the nobleman whom he had affronted, and an English mastiff with his leg lifted up, in the attitude of making water in his fhoe. He had been even fo prefumptuous as to explain the device with fatirical inferiptions in the French language, which, when Jolter perufed, his hair ftood on end with affright. The very turnkey was confounded and overawed by the boldness of his behaviour, which he had never feen matched by any inhabitant of that place; and actually joined his friend in perfuading him to fubmit to the easy demand of the minister. But our hero, far from embracing the counfel of this advocate, handed him to the door with great ceremony, and difmiffed him with a kick on the breech; and to all the fupplications, and even tears of Jolter, made no other reply than that he would ftoop to no condefcention, becaufe he had committed no crime; but would leave his cafe to the cognizance and exertion of the British court, whose duty it was to fee justice done to its own fubjects : He defired, however, that Pallet, who was confined in another place, might avail himfelf of his own difpolition, which was fufficiently pliable. But when the governor defired to fee his fellow prifoner, the turnkey gave him to underftand, that he had received no orders relating to the lady, and therefore could not admit him into her apartment; though he was complaifant enough to tell him that fhe feemed very much mortified at her confinement, and at certain times behaved as if her brain was not a little difordered. Jolter, thus baffled in all his endeavours, quitted the Baftile with a heavy heart, and reported his fruitlefs negotiation to the ambaffador, who could not help breaking forth into fome acrimonious expressions against the obstinacy and infolence of the young man, who, he faid, deferved to fuffer for his folly. Neverthelefs, he did not defift from his reprefentations to the French ministry, which he found fo unyielding, that he was obliged to threaten in plain terms to make it a national concern; and not only write to his court for inftructions, but even advife the council to make reprifals, and fend fome French gentleman in London to the Tower.

This intimation had an effect upon the miniftry at Verfailles, who, rather than run the rifk of incenfing a people, whom it was neither their intereft nor inclination to difoblige, confented to difcharge the offenders, on condition that they fhould leave Paris in three days after their enlargement. This propofal was readily agreed to by Peregrine, who was now a little more tractable, and heartily tired of being cooped up in fuch an uncomfortable abode, for the fpace of three long days, without any fort of communication or entertainment, but that which his own imagination fuggefted.

CHAPTER XLVII.

Peregrine makes himfelf merry at the expence of the painter, who curfes his landlady, and breaks with the doctor.

As he could eafily conceive the fituation of his companion in adversity, he was unwilling to leave the place, until he had reaped fome diversion from his diftrefs, and with that view repaired to the dungeon of the afflicted painter, to which he had by this time free accefs. When he entered, the first object that prefented itself to his eye was fo uncommonly ridiculous, that he could fcarce preferve that gravity of countenance which he had affected in order to execute the joke he had planned. The forlorn Pallet fat upright in his bed, in a difhabille that was altogether extraordinary. He had laid afide his monftrous hoop, together with his ftays, gown, and petticoat, wrapped his lappets about his head by way of night-cap, and wore his domino as a loofe morning-drefs; his grizzled locks hung down about his lack-luftre eyes and tawney neck, in all the diforder of negligence; his gray beard briftled about half an inch through the remains of the paint with which his vifage had been bedaubed, and every feature of his face was lengthened to the most ridiculous expression of grief and difmay. Seeing Peregrine come in, he flarted up in a fort of frantic ecitafy, and, running towards him with open arms, no fooner perceived the woeful appearance into which our hero had modelled his phyfiognomy, than he ftopped fhort all of a fudden, and the joy which had begun to take possession of his heart was in a moment difpelled by the most rueful prefages; fo that he ftood in a most ludicrous posture of dejection, like a malefactor at the Old Bailey, when fentence is about to be pronounced. Pickle, taking him by the hand, heaved a profound figh, and after having protested that he was extremely mortified at being pitched upon as the meffenger of bad news, told him, with an air of fympathy and infinite concern, that the French court having difcovered his fex, had refolved, in confideration of the outrageous indignity he offered in public to a prince of the blood, to detain him in the Baftile a prifoner for life; and that this fentence was a mitigation obtained by the importunities of the British ambaffador, the punishment ordained by law being no other than breaking alive upon the wheel. These tidings aggravated the horrors of the painter to fuch a degree, that he roared aloud, and fkipped about the room in all the extravagance of diffraction; taking God and man to witnefs that he would rather fuffer immediate death, than endure one year's imprisonment in fuch a hideous place; and curfing the hour of his birth, and the moment on which he departed from his own country. " For my own part (faid his tormentor, in a hypocritical tone), I was obliged to fwallow the bitter pill of making fubmiffions to the prince, who, as I had not prefumed to ftrike him, received acknowledgments, in confequence of which I shall be this day fet at liberty; and there is even one expedient left for the recovery of your freedom. It is, I own, a difagreeable remedy; but one had better undergo a little mortification, than be for ever wretched. Befides, upon fecond thoughts, I begin to imagine that you will not for fuch a trifle facrifice yourfelf to the unceasing horrors of a folitary dungeon, especially as your condescension will in all probability be attended with advantages which you could not otherwife enjoy. Pallet, interrupting him with great eagernefs, begged for the love of God that he would no longer keep him in the torture of fuspense, but mention that same remedy, which he was refolved to fwallow, let it be never fo unpalatable.

Peregrine, having thus played upon his paffions of fear and hope, anfwered, that, as the offence was committed in the habit of a woman, which was a difguife unworthy of the other fex, the French court was of opinion that the delinquent fhould be reduced to the neuter gender; fo that there was an alternative at his own option, by which he had it in his power to regain immediate freedom. "What! (cried the painter in defpair), become a finger? Gadzooks ! and the devil and all that, I'll rather lie ftill where I am, and let myfelf be devoured by vermine." Then thrufting out his throat, " Here is my wind-pipe (faid he), be fo good, my dear friend, as to give it a flice or two; if you don't, I thall one of these days be found dangling in my garters. What an unfortunate rafcal I am ! What a blockhead, and a beaft, and a fool was I to truft myfelf among fuch a barbarous ruffian race ! Lord forgive you, Mr. Pickle, for having been the immediate caufe of my difafter; if you had ftood by me from the beginning, according to your promife, I fhould not have been teafed by that coxcomb who has brought me to this pafs. And why did I put on this damn'd unlucky drefs? Lard curfe that chattering Jezebel of a landlady, who advifed fuch a prepofterous difguife ! a difguife which hath not only brought me to this pafs, but alfo rendered me abominable to myfelf and frightful to others; for when I this morning fignified to the turnkey, that I wanted to be fhaved, he looked at my beard with aftonifhment, and, croffing himfelf, muttered his pater nofter, believing me (I fuppole) to be a witch, or fomething worfe. And heaven confound that loathfome banquet of the ancients, which provoked me to drink too freely, that I might wash away the tafte of that accurfed fillikicaby."

Our young gentleman, having heard his lamentation to an end, excufed himfelf for his conduct, by reprefenting, that he could not poffibly forefee the difagreeable confequences that attended it; and, in the mean time, ftrenuoufly counfelled him to fubmit to the terms of his enlargement. He observed, that he was now arrived at that time of life, when the lufts of the flefh fhould be entirely mortified within him, and his greateft concern ought to be the health of his foul, to which nothing could more effectually contribute than the amputation which was propofed ; that his body, as well as his mind, would profit by the change, becaufe he would have no dangerous appetite to gratify, and no carnal thoughts to divert him from the duties of his profession; and his voice, which was naturally fweet, would improve to fuch a degree, that he would captivate the ears of all the people of fashion and taste, and in a little time be celebrated under the appellation of the English Senefino.

Thefe arguments did not fail to make an imprefion upon the painter, who, neverthelefs, ftarted two objections to his compliance; namely the difgrace of the punifhment, and the dread of his wife. Pickle undertook to obviate thefe difficulties, by affuring him, that the fentence would be executed fo privately as never to tranfpire; and that his wife could not be fo unconfcionable, after fo many years of cohabitation, as to take exceptions to an expedient, by which fhe would not only enjoy the converfation of her hufband, but even the fruits of thofe talents which the knife would fo remarkably refine.

Pallet fhook his head at this laft remonstrance, as if he thought it would not be altogether convincing to his fpouse; but yielded to the proposal, provided her confent could be obtained. Just as he fignified this condefcenfion, the gaoler entered, and, addreffing himfelf to the fuppofed lady, expressed his fatisfaction in having the honour to tell her, that the was no longer a pritoner. As the painter did not understand one word of what he faid, Peregrine undertook the office of interpreter, and made his friend believe the gaoler's fpeech was no other than an intimation, that the ministry had fent a furgeon to execute what was proposed, and that the inftruments and dreffings were prepared in the next room. Alarmed and terrified at this fudden appointment, he flew to the other end of the room, and fnatching up an earthen chamberpot, which was the only offenfive weapon in the place, put himfelf in a posture of defence, and, with many oaths, threatened to try the temper of the barber's skull, if he fhould prefume to fet his nofe within the apartment.

The gaoler, who little expected fuch a reception, concluded that the poor gentlewoman had actually loft her wits, and retreated with precipitation, leaving the door open as he went out. Upon which Pickle, gathering up the particulars of his dreis with great defpatch, crammed them into Pallet's arms, and, taking notice that now the coaft was clear, exhorted him to follow his footfleps to the gate, where a hackney coach flood for his reception. There being no time for hefitation, the painter took his advice, and, without quitting the utenfil, which in his hurry he forgot to lay down, fallied out in the rear of our hero, with all that wilduefs of terror and impatience which may be reafonably fuppofed to take poffeffion of a man who flies from perpetual imprifonment. Such was the tumult of his agitation, that his faculty of thinking was for the prefent utterly overwhelmed, and he faw no object but his conductor, whom he followed by a fort of inftinctive impulfe, without regarding the keepers and centinels, who, as he paffed, with his clothes under one arm, and his chamber-pot brandifhed above his head, were confounded, and even difmayed at the ftrange apparition.

During the whole courfe of this irruption, he ceafed not to cry with great vociferation, " Drive, coachman, drive, in the name of God !" And the carriage had proceeded the length of a whole ftreet, before he munifested the leaft fign of reflection, but flared like the Gorgon's head, with his mouth wide open, and each particular hair crawling and twining like an animated ferpent. At length, however, he began to recover the ufe of his fenfes, and afked if Peregrine thought him out of all danger of being retaken. This unrelenting wag, not yet fatisfied with the affliction he had imposed upon the fufferer, anfwered, with an air of doubt and concern, that he hoped they would not be overtaken, and prayed to God they might not be retarded by a ftop of carriages Pallet fervently joined in this fupplication, and they advanced a few yards further, when the noife of a coach at full fpeed behind them invaded their ears; and Pickle having looked out of the window, withdrew his head in feeming confusion, and exclaimed, " Lord have mercy upon us ! I wish that may not be a guard fent after us. Methinks I faw the muzzle of a fufil flicking out of the coach." The painter, hearing these tidings, that instant thrust himself half out at the window, with his helmet ftill in his hand, bellowing to the coachman, as loud as he could roar, " Drive, damn ye, drive ! to the gates of Jericho and ends of the earth ! Drive, you raggamuffin, you rafcallion, you hell-bound ! drive us to the pit of hell, rather than we fhould be -taken."

Such a phantem could not pafs without attracting the curiofity of the people, who ran to the doors and windows, in order to behold this object of admiration. With the fame view, that coach, which was imposed to be in purfuit of him, ftopped just as the windows of each happened to be opposite; and Pallet looking behind, and feeing three men standing upon the foot-board, armed with canes, which his fear converted into fufils, never doubted that his friend's fufpicion was just; but, fhaking his jordan at the imaginary guard, fwore he would fooner die than part with his precious ware. The owner of the coach, who was a nobleman of the first quality, miltook him for fome unhappy woman deprived of her fenfes; and, ordering his coachman to proceed, convinced the fugitive, to his infinite joy, that this was no more than a falfe alarm. He was not, for all that, freed from anxiety and trepidation; but our young gentleman, fearing his brain would not bear a repetition of the fame joke, permitted him to gain his own lodgings, without further molestation.

His landlady, meeting him on the ftair, was fo affected at his appearance, that fhe fcreamed aloud, and betook herfelf to flight; while he, curfing her with great bitternefs, rushed into the apartment of the doctor, who, inftead of receiving him with cordial embraces, and congratulating him upon his deliverance, gave evident tokens of umbrage and difcontent; and even plainly told him, he hoped to have heard that he and Mr. Pickle had acted the glorious part of Cato-an event which would have laid the foundation of fuch noble ftruggles, as could not fail to end in happinefs and freedom; and that he had already made fome progrefs in an ode that would have immortalized their names, and infpired the flame of liberty, in every honeft breaft .--- " There (faid he), I would have proved, that great talents, and high fentiments of liberty, do reciprocally produce and affift each other; and illustrated my affertions with fuch notes and quotations from the Greek writers, as would have opened the eyes of the most blind and unthinking, and touched the most callous and obdurate heart. O fool ! to think the man, whole ample mind must grasp whatever yonder stars survey-Pray, Mr. Pallet, what is your opinion of that image of the mind's grafping the whole universe? For my own part, I can't help thinking it the most happy conception that ever entered my imagination.

The painter, who was not fuch a flaming enthuliast in the caufe of liberty, could not brook the doctor's reflections, which he thought favoured a little too much of indifference and deficiency in point of private friendship ; and therefore feized the prefent opportunity of mortifying his pride, by obferving, that the image was, without all doubt, very grand and magnificent; but that he had been obliged for the idea to Mr. Bayes, in the Rehearfal, who values himfelf upon the fame figure, conveyed in these words, But all these clouds, when by the eye of reason grasp'd, &c. Upon any other occasion, the painter would have triumphed greatly in this detection; but fuch was the flutter and confusion of his spirits, under the apprehendion of being retaken, that, without further communication, he retreated to his own room, in order to refume his own drefs, which he hoped would alter his appearance in fuch a manner, as to baffle all fearch and examination; while the phyfician remained ashamed and abashed, to find himself convicted of bombast by a perfon of fuch contemptible talents. He was offended at this proof of his memory, and fo much enraged at his prefumption in exhibiting it, that he could never forgive his want of reverence, and took every opportunity of exposing his ignorance and folly in the fequel. Indeed, the ties of private affection were too weak to engage the heart of this republican, whole zeal for the community had entirely fwallowed up his concern for individuals. He looked upon particular friendship as a passion unworthy of his ample foul, and was a profeffed admirer of L. Manlius, Junius Brutus, and those later patriots of the fame name, who fhut their ears against the cries of nature, and refisted all the dictates of gratitude and humanity.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Pallet conceives a hearty contempt of his fellow-traveller, and attaches himfelf to Pickle, who, neverthelefs, perfecutes him with his mifchievous talent upon the road to Flanders.

In the mean time, his companion having employed divers pails full of water, in cleanfing himfelf from the fqualour of a jail, fubmitted his face to the barber, tinged his eye-brows with a fable hue, and, being dreffed in his own clothes, ventured to vifit Peregrine, who was ftill under the hands of his valet-de-chambre, and who gave him to underftand, that his escape had been connived at, and that the condition of their deliverance was their departure from Paris in three days.

The painter was transported with joy, when he learnt that he ran no rifk of being. retaken; and, far from repining at the terms of his enlargement, would have willingly fet out on his return to England that fame afternoon; for the Baftile had made fuch an impreffion upon him, that he ftarted at the found of every coach, and turned pale at fight of a French foldier. In the fulnefs of his heart, he complained of the doctor's indifference, and related. what had paffed at their meeting with evident marks of refentment and difrespect; which were not at all diminished, when Jolter informed him of the phyfician's behaviour, when he fent for him to confer about the means of abridging their confinement. Pickle himfelf was incenfed at his want of bowels; and, perceiving how much he had funk in the opinion of his fellow-traveller, refolved to encourage these sentiments of difgust, and occafionally foment the division to a downright quarrel, which he forefaw would produce fome diversion, and perhaps expose the poet's character in fuch a light as would effectually punish him for his arrogance and bar-With this view, he levelled feveral fatirical jokes barity. at the doctor's pedantry and tafte, which had appeared fo confpicuous in the quotations he had got by heart from ancient authors; in his affected difdain of the beft pictures in the world, which, had he been endowed with the leaft fhare of difcernment, he could not have beheld with fuch infenfibility; and, laftly, in his ridiculous banquet, which none but an egregious coxcomb, devoid of all elegance and fenfe, would have prepared, or prefent-ed to rational beings. In a word, our young gentleman played the artillery of his wit against him with fuch fuccefs, that the painter feemed to wake from a dream, and went home with the most hearty contempt for the perfon he had formerly adored.

Inftead of using the privilege of a friend, to enter his Vol. II. S apartment without ceremony, he fent in his fervant with a meffage, importing, that he intended to fet out from Paris next day, in company with Mr. Pickle, and defiring to know whether or not he was or would be prepared for the journey. The doctor, ftruck with the manner, as well as the matter of this intimation, went immediately to Pallet's room, and demanded to know the caufe of fuch a fudden determination, without his privity or concurrence; and, when he understood the necessity of their affairs, rather than travel by himfelf, he ordered his baggage to be packed up, and fignified his readinefs to conform to the emergency of the cafe; though he was not at all pleafed with the cavalier behaviour of Pallet, to whom he threw out fome hints of his own importance, and the immenfity of his condefcention, in favouring him with fuch marks of regard. But by this time thefe infinuations had loft their effect upon the painter, who told him, with an arch fneer, that he did not at all question his learning and abilities, and particularly his skill in cookery, which he should never forget while his palate retained its function; but neverthelefs advifed him, for the fake of the degenerate eaters of thefe days, to fpare a little of his fal armoniac in the next fillykickaby he fhould prepare; and bate fomewhat of the devil's dung, which he had fo plentifully crammed into the roafted fowls, unlefs he had a mind to convert his guests into patients, with a view of licking himfelf whole for the expence of the entertainment.

The phyfician, nettled at thefe farcafms, eyed him with a look of indignation and difdain; and, being unwilling to exprefs himfelf in Englifh, left, in the courfe of the altercation, Pallet fhould be fo much irritated as to depart without him, he vented his anger in Greek. The painter, though, by the found, he fuppofed this quotation to be Greek, complimented his friend upon his knowledge in the Welch language, and found means to rally him quite out of temper; fo that he retired to his own chamber in the utmoft wrath and mortification, and left his antagonift exulting over the victory he had won.

While those things passed between these originals, Peregrine waited upon the ambaffador, whom he thanked for his kind interposition, acknowledging the indifference of his own conduct, with fuch appearance of conviction, and promifes of reformation, that his excellency freely forgave him for all the trouble he had been put to on his account, fortified him with fenfible advices, and, affuring him of his continual favour and friendfhip, gave him, at parting, letters of introduction to feveral perfons of quality belonging to the Britifh court.

Thus diftinguished, our young gentleman took leave of all his French acquaintance, and spent the evening with some of those who had enjoyed the greatest share of his intimacy and confidence; while Joster superintended his domestic concerns, and, with infinite joy, bespoke a post-chaise and horses, in order to convey him from a place where he lived in continual apprehension of fusfering by the dangerous disposition of his pupil. Every thing being adjusted according to their plan, they and their fellow-travellers next day dined together, and, about four in the afternoon, took their departure in two chaises, efforted by the valet-de-chambre, Pipes, and the doctor's lacquey, on horseback, well furnished with arms and ammunition, in case of being attacked by robbers on the road.

It was about eleven o'clock at night when they arrived at Senlis, which was the place at which they proposed to lodge, and where they were obliged to knock up the people of the inn, before they could have their fupper prepared. All the provision in the house was but barely fufficient to furnish one indifferent meal : However, the painter confoled himself for the quantity with the quality of the dishes, one of which was a fricaffee of rabbit, a preparation which he valued above all the dainties that ever fmcked upon the table of the fumptuous Heliogabalus.

He had no fooner expressed himfelf to this effect than our hero, who was almost inceffantly laying traps for diversion at his neighbour's expence, laid hold on the declaration; and, recollecting the ftory of Scipio and the muleteer in Gil Blas, refolved to perpetrate a joke upon the ftomach of Pallet, which feemed particularly well disposed to an hearty supper. He accordingly digested his plan; and, the company being feated at table, affected to gaze with peculiar eagerness at the painter, who had helped himself to a large portion of the fricaffee, and began to fwallow it with infinite relift. Pallet, notwithftanding the keennefs of his appetite, could not help taking notice of Pickle's demeanour; and, making a fhort paufe in the exercife of his grinders, "You are furprifed (fuid he) to fee me make fo much defpatch; but I was extremely hungry, and this is one of the beft fricaffees I ever tafted: The French are very expert in thefe difhes, that I muft allow; and, upon my confcience, I would never defire to eat a more delicate rabbit than this that lies upon my plate."

Peregrine made no other reply to this encomium, than the repetition of the word " rabbit !" with a note of admiration, and fuch a fignificant fhake of the head, as effectually alarmed the other, who inftantly fufpended the action of his jaws, and, with the morfel half chewed in his mouth, ftared round him with a certain folidity of apprehension, which is easier conceived than described. until his eyes encountered the countenance of Thomas Pipes, who being inftructed, and posted opposite to him for the occasion, exhibited an arch grin, that completed the painter's diforder. Afraid of fwallowing his mouthful, and ashamed to dispose of it any other way, he fat fome time in a most distressed state of suspense; and, being queftioned by Mr. Jetter touching his calamity, made a violent effort of the muscles of his gullet, which with difficulty performed their office, and then, with great confusion and concern, asked if Mr. Pickle fuspected the rabbit's identity ? The young gentleman, affuming a myfterious air, pretended ignorance of the matter; obferving, that he was apt to fuspect all dishes of that kind, fince he had been informed of the tricks which were commouly played at inns in France, Italy, and Spain, and recounted that paffage in Gil Blas, which we have hinted at above, faying, he did not pretend to be a connoiffeur in animals, but the legs of the creature which compofed that fricafiee did not, in his opinion, refemble those of the rabbits he had ufually feen. This observation had an evident effect upon the features of the painter, who, with certain figns of loathing and aftonishment, exclaimed, " Lord Jefus !" and appealed to Pipes for a difcovery of the truth, by alking if he knew any thing of the affair. Tom very gravely replied, that he did fuppofe the food was wholefome enough, for he had feen the fkin and feet of a fpecial ram-cat, new flea'd, hanging upon the door of a fmall pantry adjoining to the kitchen.

Before this fentence was uttered, Pallet's belly feemed to move in contact with his back-bone, his colour changed, no part but the whites of his eyes were to be feen, he dropped his lower jaw, and fixing his hands in his fides, retched with fuch convultive agonies, as amazed and difconcerted the whole company; and what augmented his diforder, was the tenacious retention of his ftomach, which abfolutely refused to part with its contents, notwithftanding all the energy of his abhorrence, which threw him into a cold fweat, and almost into a fwoon.

Pickle, alarmed at his condition, affured him it was a genuine rabbit, and that he had tutored Pipes to fay otherwife for the joke's fake. But this confession he confidered as a friendly artifice of Pickle's compassion, and therefore it had little effect upon his conftitution. By the affiftance, however, of a large bumper of brandy, his fpirits were recruited, and his recollection fo far recovered, that he was able to declare, with divers contortions of face, that the difh had a particular ranknefs of tafte, which he had imputed partly to the nature of the French coney, and partly to the composition of their fauces : Then he inveighed against the infamous practices of French publicans, attributing fuch imposition to their oppressive government, which kept them fo neceffitous, that they were tempted to exercife all manner of knavery upon their unwary guefts.

Jolter, who could not find in his heart to let flip any opportunity of fpeaking in favour of the French, told him, " that he was a very great ftranger to their police, elfe he would know, that if, upon information to the magiftrate, it fhould appear, that any traveller, native or foreigner, had been impofed upon or ill-treated by a publican, the offender would be immediately obliged to fhut up his houfe; and, if his behaviour had been notorious, he himfelf would be fent to the galleys, without the leaft hefitation : And, as for the difh which has been made the occafion of your prefent diforder (faid he), I will take upon me to affirm it was prepared of a genuine rabbit, which was fkinned in my prefence; and, in confirmation S iij of what I affert, though fuch fricaffees are not the favourites of my tafte, I will eat a part of this without fcruple." So faying, he fwallowed feveral mouthfuls of the queflioned coney, and Pallet feemed to eye it again with inclination; nay, he even refumed his knife and fork, and, being just on the point of applying them, was feized with another qualm of apprehension, that broke out in an exclamation of " After all, Mr. Jolter, if it fhould be a real ram-cat-Lord have mercy upon me! here is one of the claws." With these words he presented the tip of a toe, of which Pipes had fnipped off five or fix from a duck that was roafted, and purpofely feattered them in the fricaffee; and the governor could not behold this teftimonial without fymptoms of uneafinefs and remorfe; fo that he and the painter fat filenced and abashed, and made faces at each other, while the physician, who hated them both, exulted over their affliction, bidding them be of good cheer, and proceed with their meal; for he was ready to demonstrate, that the flesh of a cat was as nourishing and delicious as veal or mutton, provided they could prove that the faid cat was not of the boar-kind, and had fed chiefly on vegetable diet, or even confined its carnivorus appetite to rats and mice, which he affirmed to be dainties of exquisite taste and flavour. He faid, it was a vulgar miftake to think that all flefh-devouring creatures were unfit to be eaten; witnefs the confumption of fwine and ducks, animals that delight in carnage, as well as fifh, which prey upon each other, and feed on bait and carrion; together with the demand for bear, of which the beft hams in the world are made. He then observed, that the Negroes on the coaft of Guinea, who are healthy and vigorous people, prefer cats and dogs to all other fare; and mentioned from hiftory feveral fieges, during which the inhabitants, who were blocked up, lived upon thefe animals, and had recourfe even to human flesh, which, to his certain knowledge, was in all refpects preferable to pork; for, in the course of his studies, he had, for the experiment's fake, eaten a fteak cut from the buttock of a perfon who had been hanged.

This differtation, far from composing, increased the disquiet in the ftomachs of the governor and painter, who, hearing the last illustration, turned their eyes upon the orator, at the fame inftant, with looks of horror and difguft; and, the one muttering the term cannibal, and the other pronouncing the word abomination, they role from table in a great hurry, and, running towards another apartment, joftled with fuch violence in the paffage, that both were overturned by the flock, which alfo contributed to the effect of their naufea, that mutually defiled them as they lay.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Nor is the phyfician facred from his ridicule. They reach Arras, where our adventurer engages in play with two French officers, who next morning give the laudlord an interefting proof of their importance.

THE doctor remained fullen and dejected during the whole journey-not but that he attempted to recover his importance, by haranguing upon the Roman highways, when Mr. Jolter defired the company to take notice of the fine pavement upon which they travelled from Paris into Flanders; but Pallet, who thought he had now gained the afcendency over the phyfician, exerted himfelf in maintaining the fuperiority he had acquired, by venting various farcafms upon his felf-conceit and affectation of learning, and even uttering puns and conundrums upon the remarks which the republican retailed. When he talked of the Flaminian Way, the painter queftioned if it was a better pavement than the Fleminian way on which they travelled : And the doctor having observed, that this road was made for the convenience of drawing the French artillery into Flanders, which was often the feat of war, his competitor in wit replied, with infinite vivacity, " There are more great guns than the French king knows of drawn along this caufeway, doctor !

Encouraged by the fuccefs of thele efforts, which tickled the imagination of Jolter, and drew fmiles (as he imagined) of approbation from our hero, he fported in many other equivoques of the fame nature; and at dinner told the phyfician, that he was like the root of the tongue, as being curfedly down in the mouth.

S iiii

By this time, fuch was the animolity fublifting between thefe quondam friends, that they never converfed together, except with a view of expoling each other to the ridicule or contempt of their fellow-travellers. The doctor was at great pains to point out the folly and ignorance of Pallet in private to Peregrine, who was often conjured in the fame manner by the painter to take notice of the phylician's want of manners and tafte. Pickle pretended to acquicifie in the truth of their mutual leverity, which indeed was extremely juft; and, by malicious infinuations, blew up their contention, with a view of bringing it to open holtility. But both feemed fo averfe to deeds of mortal purpofe, that for a long time his arts were baffled, and he could not fpirit them up to any pitch of refentment higher than feurrilous repartee.

Before they reached Arras, the city gates were flut, fo that they were obliged to take up their lodging at an indifferent houfe in the fuburbs, where they found a couple of French officers, who had alfo rode poft from Paris fo far on their way to Lifle. Thefe gentlemen were about the age of thirty, and their deportment diffinguished by fuch an air of infolence, as difgufted our hero, who neverthelefs accofted them politely in the yard, and propofed that they fhould fup together. They thanked him for the honour of his invitation, which, however, they declined upon pretence of having ordered fomething for themfelves, but promifed to wait upon him and his company immediately after their repart.

This they accordingly performed; and, after having drank a few glaffes of Burgundy, one of them afked if the young gentleman would, for paftime, take a hand at quadrille. Peregrine eafily divined the meaning of this propofal, which was made with no other view than that of fleecing him and his fellow-travellers; for he well knew to what fhifts a fubaltern in the French fervice is reduced, in order to maintain the appearance of a gentleman, and had reafon to believe that most of them were fharpers from their youth: But, as he depended a good deal upon his own penetration and addrefs, he gratified the ftranger's defire; and a party was inftantly formed of the painter, the phyfician, the propofer, and himfelf, the other officer having profeffed himfelf utterly ignorant of the game; yet, in the courfe of the play, he took his ftation at the back of Pickle's chair, which was opposite to his friend, on pretence of amufing himfelf with feeing his manner of conducting the cards. The youth was not fuch a novice but that he perceived the defign of this palpable piece of behaviour, which notwithftanding he overlooked for the prefent, with a view of flattering their hopes in the beginning, that they might be the more effectually punished by their difappointment in the end.

The game was fcarce begun, when, by the reflection of a glafs, he difcerned the officer at his back making figns to his companion, who, by thefe preconcerted geitures, was perfectly informed of the contents of Peregrine's hand, and of confequence fortunate in the courfe of the play.

Thus they were allowed to enjoy the fruits of their dexterity, until their money amounted to fome Louis, when our young gentleman, thinking it high time to do himfelf juftice, fignified in very polite terms to the gentleman who ftood behind him, that he could never play with eafe and deliberation when he was overlooked by any byftander, and begged that he would have the goodnefs to be feated.

As this was a remonstrance which the stranger could not with any show of breeding result, he asked pardon, and retired to the chair of the physician, who frankly told him, that it was not the fashion of his country for one to submit his hand to the perusual of a spectrator; and when, in consequence of this rebuss, he wanted to quarter himself upon the painter, he was resulted by a wave of the hand, and shake of the head, with an exclamation of Pardonnez moi which was repeated with such emphasis, as discomposed his effrontery, and he found himself obliged to fit down in a state of mortification.

The odds being thus removed, fortune proceeded in her ufual channel; and though the Frenchman, deprived of his ally, endeavoured to practife divers firokes of fineffe, the reft of the company obferved him with fuch vigilance and caution, as baffled all his attempts, and in a very little time he was compelled to part with his winning: But having engaged in the match with an intention of taking all advantages, whether fair or unfair, that his fuperior fkill fhould give him over the Englifhman, the money was not refunded without a thoufand difputes, in the courfe of which he effayed to intimidate his antagonift with high words, which were retorted by our hero with fuch intereft, as convinced him that he had miftaken his man, and perfuaded him to make his retreat in quiet. Indeed it was not without caufe that they repined at the bad fuccefs of their enterprife; becaufe, in all likelihood, they had nothing to depend upon for the prefent but their own induftry, and knew not how to defray their expences on the road, except by fome acquifition of this kind.

Next morning they rofe at day-break, and, refolving to anticipate their fellow-lodgers, befpoke poft horfes as foon as they could be admitted into the city; fo that, when our company appeared, their beafts were ready in the yard; and they only waited to difcufs the bill, which they had ordered to be made out. The landlord of the inn prefented his carte with fear and trembling to one of thofe ferocious cavaliers, who no fooner caft his eye upon the fum total, then he difcharged a volley of dreadful oaths, and afked if the king's officers were to be treated in that manner ? the poor publican protefted, with great humility, that he had the utmost refpect for his majefty, and every thing that belonged to him; and that, far from confulting his own intereft, all that he defired was to be barely indemnified for the expence of their lodging.

This condefcention feemed to have no other effect than that of encouraging their arrogance. They fwore his extortion thould be explained to the commandant of the town, who would, by making him a public example, teach other innkeepers how to behave towards men of honour; and threatened with fuch confidence of indignation, that the wretched landlord, dreading the confequence of their wrath, implored pardon in the moft abject manner, begging, with many fupplications, that he might have the pleafure of lodging them at his own charge. This was a favour which he with great difficulty obtained; they chid him teverely for his impofition, exhorted him to have more regard for his own confcience, as well as for the convenience of his guefts; and cautioning him in particular touching his behaviour to the gentlemen of the army, mounted their horfes, and rode off in great ftate, leaving him very thankful for having fo fuccefsfully appealed the choler of two officers, who wanted either inclination or ability to pay their bill; for experience had taught him to be apprehenfive of all fuch travellers, who commonly lay the landlord under contribution, by way of atonement for the extravagance of his demands, even after he has profefied his willingnels to entertain them on their own terms.

CHAPTER L.

Peregrine moralizes upon their behaviour, which is condemned by the doctor, and defended by the governor. They arrive in fafety at Lifle, dine at an ordinary, vilit the citadel. The phyfician quarrels with a North Britain, who is put in arreft.

THESE honourable adventurers being gone, Peregrine, who was prefent during the transfaction, informed himfelf of the particulars from the mouth of the innkeeper himfelf, who took God and the faints to witnels, that he should have been a lofer by their custom, even if the bill had been paid; because he was on his guard against their objections, and had charged every article at an under price: But such was the authority of officers in France, that he durft not dispute the least circumstance of their will; for, had the case come under the cognizance of the magiftrate, he muss in course have suffered by the maxims of their government, which never fail to abet the opprefsion of the army; and besides run the risk of incurring their future refentment, which would be fufficient to ruin him from top to bottom.

Our hero boiled with indignation at this inftance of injuftice and arbitrary power; and, turning to his governor, afked if this too was a proof of the happinefs enjoyed by the French people. Jolter replied, that every human conftitution muft in fome things be imperfect; and owned, that in this kingdom gentlemen were more countenanced than the vulgar, becaufe it was to be prefumed that their own fentiments of honour and fuperior qualifications would entitle them to this pre-eminence, which had also a retrospective view to the merit of their ancestors, in confideration of which they were at first ennobled: But he affirmed, that the innkeeper had misrepresented the magistracy, which in France never failed to punish flagrant outrages and abuse, without respect of perfons.

The painter approved of the wifdom of the French government, in bridling the infolence of the mob, by which, he affured them, he had often fuffered in his own perfon; having been often befpattered by hackney-coachmen, joftled by draymen and porters, and reviled in the most opprobrious terms by the watermen of London, where he had ouce loft his bag and a confiderable quantity of hair, which had been cut off by fome rafcal in his paifage through Ludgate, during the Lord Mayor's proceffion. On the other hand, the doctor, with great warmth, alleged, that those officers ought to fuffer death, or banishment at least, for having plundered the people in this manner, which was fo impudent and barefaced, as plainly to prove they were certain of efcaping with impunity, and that they were old offenders in the fame degree of delinquency. He faid, that the greatest man in Athens would have been condemned to perpetual exile, and feen his eftate confifcated for public ufe, had he dared in fuch a licentious manner to violate the rights of a fellow-citizen; and as for the little affronts to which a man may be fubject from the petulance of the multitude, he looked upon them as glorious indications of liberty, which ought not to be repressed, and would at any time rejoice to find himfelf overthrown in a kennel by the infolence of a fon of freedom, even though the fall fhould coft him a limb; adding, by way of illustration, that the greatest pleasure he ever enjoyed was in feeing a dustman wilfully overturn a gentleman's coach, in which two ladies were bruifed, even to the danger of their lives. Pallet, fhocked at the extravagance of this declaration, " If that be the cafe (faid he), I wifh you may fee every bone in your body broke by the first carman you meet in the itreets of London."

This argument being difcuffed, and the reckoning difcharged without any deduction, although the landlord, in flating the articles, had an eye to the lofs he had fuftained by his own countrymen, they departed from Arras, and arrived in fafety at Lifle, about two o'clock in the afternoon.

They had fcarce taken poffellion of their lodgings, in a large hotel in the Grande Place, when the innkeeper gave them to understand, that he kept an ordinary below, which was frequented by feveral English gentlemen who refided in town, and that dinner was then upon the table. Peregrine, who feized all opportunities of obferving new characters, perfuaded his company to dine in public; and they were accordingly conducted to the place, where they found a mixture of Scotch and Dutch officers, who had come from Holland to learn their exercifes at the academy, and fome gentlemen in the French fervice, who were upon garrifon duty in the citadel. Among these last was a perfon about the age of fifty, of a remarkably genteel air and polite addrefs, dignified with a Maltefe crofs, and diffinguished by the particular veneration of all those who knew him. When he understood that Pickle and his friends were travellers, he accofted the youth in English, which he spoke tolerably well; and, as they were ftrangers, offered to attend them in the afternoon to all the places worth feeing in Lifle. Our hero thanked him for his excels of politenels, which (he faid) was peculiar to the French nation; and, ftruck with his engaging appearance, industrioully courted his conversation, in the course of which he learnt, that this chevalier was a man of good feufe and great experience, that he was perfectly well acquainted with the greatest part of Europe, had lived fome years in England, and was no ftranger to the conflitution and genius of that people.

Having dined, and drank to the healths of the English and French kings, two faceres were called, in one of which the knight, with one of his companions, the governor, and Peregrine feated themfelves, the other being occupied by the physician, Pallet, and two Scottish officers, who proposed to accompany them in their circuit. The first place they visited was the citadel, round the ramparts of which they walked, under the conduct of the knight, who explained with great accuracy the intention of every particular fortification belonging to that feemingly impregnable fortrefs; and, when they had fatisfied their curiofity, took coach again, in order to view the arfenal, which ftands in another quarter of the town; but, just as Pickle's carriage had croffed the promenade, he heard his own name bawled aloud by the painter; and, ordering the fiacre to ftop, faw Pallet with one half of his body thrust out at the window of the other coach, crying with a terrified look, "Mr. Pickle, Mr. Pickle, for the love of God! halt, and prevent bloodfhed, elfe here will be carnage and cutting of throats." Peregrine, furprifed at this exclamation, immediately alighted, and, advancing to the other vehicle, found one of their military companions flanding upon the ground, at the further fide of the coach, with his fword drawn, and fury in his countenance; and the phyfician, with a quivering lip and haggard afpect, ftruggling with the other, who had interpofed in the quarrel, and detained him in his place.

Our young gentleman, upon inquiry, found that this animolity had fprung from a difpute that happened upon the ramparts, touching the ftrength of the fortification, which the doctor, according to cuftom, undervalued, becaufe it was a modern work; faying, that, by the help of the military engines used among the ancients, and a few thousands of pioneers, he would engage to take it in lefs than ten days after he fhould fit down before it. The North Briton, who was as great a pendant as the physician, having ftudied fortification, and made himfelf mafter of Cæfar's Commentaries and Polybius, with the obfervations of Folard, affirmed, that all the methods of befieging practifed by the ancients would be utterly ineffectual against fuch a plan as that of the citadel of Lisle; and began to compare the vinea, aggeres, arietes, fcorpiones, and catapulta, of the Romans, with the trenches, mines, batteries, and mortars, used in the prefent art of war-The republican, finding himfelf attacked upon what he thought his ftrong fide, fummoned all his learning to his aid; and, defcribing the famous fiege of Platza, happened to mifquote a paffage of Thucydides, in which he was corrected by the other, who, having been educated for the church, was also a connoiffeur in the Greek language. The doctor, incenfed at being detected in fuch a blunder, in prefence of Pallet, who (he knew) would promulgate his fhame, told the officer, with great arrogance, that his objection was frivolous, and that he must not pretend to difpute on thefe matters with one who had confidered them with the utmost accuracy and care. His antagonift, piqued at this fupercilious infinuation, replied with great heat, that, for aught he knew, the doctor might be a very expert apothecary, but that, in the art of war, and knowledge in the Greek tongue, he was no other than an ignorant pretender. This affeveration produced an anfwer full of virulence, including a national reflection upon the foldier's country; and the contention role to mutual abufe, when it was fuppreffed by the admonitions of the other two, who begged they would not expose themfelves in a strange place, but behave themselves like fellow-fubjects and friends. They accordingly ceafed reviling each other, and the affair was feemingly forgot; but after they had refumed their places in the coach, the painter unfortunately afked the meaning of the word Tortoife, which he had heard them mention among the Roman implements of war. This queftion was answered by the phyfician, who defcribed the nature of this expedient fo little to the fatisfaction of the officer, that he contradicted him flatly, in the midst of his explanation; a circumftance which provoked the republican to fuch a degree, that, in the temerity of his paffion, he uttered the epithet impertinent [coundrel; which was no fooner pronounced than the Caledonian made manual application to his nofe, and, leaping out of the coach, ftood waiting for him on the plain; while he (the phyfician) made feeble efforts to join him, being eafily retained by the other foldier; and Pallet, dreading the confequence in which he himfelf might be involved, bellowed aloud for prevention.

Our hero endeavoured to quiet the commotion, by reprefenting to the Scot, that he had already taken fatisfaction for the injury he had received, and telling the doctor that he had deferved the chaftifement which was inflicted upon him: But the officer (encouraged perhaps by the confusion of his antagonist) infisted upon his alking pardon for what he had faid; and the doctor, believing himfelf under the protection of his friend Pickle, far from agreeing to fuch concession, breathed nothing but defiance and revenge: So that the chevalier, in order to prevent mifchief, put the foldier under arreft, and fent him to his lodgings, under the care of the other French gentleman and his own companion; they being alfo accompanied by Mr. Jolter, who, having formerly feen all the curiofities of Lifle, willingly furrendered his place to the phyfician.

CHAPTER LI.

Pickle engages with a knight of Malta in a converfation upon the Englifh flage, which is followed by a differtation on the theatres of the ancients, by the doctor.

THE reft of the company proceeded to the arfenal, which having viewed, together with fome remarkable churches, they, in their return, went to the comedy, and faw the Cid of Corneille tolcrably well reprefented. In confequence of this entertainment, the difcourfe at fupper turned upon dramatic performances; and all the objections of Monf. de Scudery to the piece they had feen acted, together with the decifion of the French academy, were canvaffed and difcuffed. The knight was a man of letters and tafte, and particularly well acquainted with the ftate of the English stage; fo that, when the painter boldly pronounced fentence against the French manner of acting, on the strength of having frequented a Covent Garden club of critics, and been often admitted, by virtue of an order, into the pit; a comparison immediately ensued, not between the authors, but the actors of both nations, to whom the chevalier and Peregrine were no ftrangers. Our hero, like a good Englishman, made no feruple of giving the preference to the performers of his own country, who, he alleged, obeyed the genuine impulies of nature, in exhibiting the paffions of the human mind; and entered fo warmly into the fpirit of their feveral parts, that they often fancied themfelves the very heroes they represented; whereas, the action of the Parifian plavers, even in their most interesting characters, was generally fuch an extravagance in voice and gefture, as is no where to be observed but on the stage. To illustrate this affertion, he availed himfelf of his talent, and mimicked the manner and voice of all the principal performers, male and female, belonging to the French comedy, to the admiration of the chevalier, who, having complimented him upon this furprifing modulation, begged leave to diffent in fome particulars from the opinion he had avowed. " That you have good actors in England (faid he), it would be unjust and abfurd in me to deny; your theatre is adorned by one woman, whole fenfibility and fweetnefs of voice is fuch as I have never obferved on any other ftage; fhe has, befides, an elegance of perfon and expreffion of features, that wonderfully adapt her for the moft engaging characters of your best plays; and I must freely own that I have been as highly delighted and as deeply affected by a Monimia and Belvidera at London, as ever I was by a Cornelia and Cleopatra at Paris. Your favourite actor is a furprifing genius. You can, more-over, boast of several comic actors, who are perfect masters of buffoonery and grimace; though, to be free with you, I think, in these qualifications, you are excelled by the players of Amfterdam. Yet one of your gratiofos I cannot admire, in all the characters he affumes. His utterance is a continual fing-fong, like the chanting of vefpers, and his action refembles that of heaving ballaft into the hold of a fhip. In his outward deportment, he feems to have confounded the ideas of dignity and infolence of mien; acts the crafty, cool, defigning Crookback, as a loud, shallow, bluttering Hector; in the character of the mild patriot Brutus, he lofes all temper and decorum; nay, fo ridiculous is the behaviour of him and Caffius at their interview, that, fetting foot to foot, and grinning at each other, with the aspect of two coblers enraged, they thrust their left fides together with repeated fhocks, that the hilts of their fwords may clash for the entertainment of the audience, as if they were a couple of Merry Andrews, endeavouring to raife the laugh of the vulgar, on fome fcaffold at Bartholomew Fair. The defpair of a great man, who falls a facrifice to the infernal practices of a fubtle traitor, that enjoyed his confidence, this English Æfopus represents, by beating his own forehead, and bellowing like a bull; and indeed, in almost all his most interesting scenes, performs such strange shakings Vol. II. T of the head, and other antic gefticulations, that, when I first faw him act, I imagined the poor man laboured under that paralytical diforder, which is known by the name of St. Vitus's dance. In fhort, he feems to be a ftranger to the more refined fenfations of the foul, confequently his expression is of the vulgar kind, and he must often fink under the idea of the poet; fo that he has recourfe to fuch violence of affected agitation, as impofes upon the undifcerning spectator, but, to the eye of taste, evinces him a mere player of that clafs whom your admired Shakspeare justly compares to nature's journeyman tearing a paffion to rags. Yet this man, in spite of all these absurdities, is an admirable Falftaff, exhibits the character of the Eighth Henry to the life, is reafonably applauded in the Plain Dealer, excels in the part of Sir John Brute, and would be equal to many humorous fituations in low comedy, which his pride will not allow him to undertake. I fhould not have been fo fevere upon this actor, had I not feen him extolled by his partizans with the most ridiculous and fulfome manifestations of praise, even in those very circumstances wherein (as I have observed) he chiefly failed."

Pickle, not a little piqued to hear the qualifications of fuch a celebrated actor in England treated with fuch freedom and difrefpect, anfwered with fome afperity, that the chevalier was a true critic, more industrious in obferving the blemistes, than in acknowledging the excellence of those who fell under his examination.

It was not to be fuppofed that one actor could fhine equally in all characters; and though his obfervations were undoubtedly very judicious, he himfelf could not help wondering that fome of them had always efcaped his notice, though he had been an affiduous frequenter of the playhoufe. "The player in queftion (faid he) has, in your own opinion, confiderable fhare of merit in the characters of comic life; and as to the manners of the great perfonages in tragedy, and the operation of the grand paffions of the foul, I apprehend they may be varioufly reprefented, according to the various complexion and cultivation of different men. A Spaniard, for example, though impelled by the fame paffion, will express it very differently from a Frenchman; and what is looked upon as graceful vivacity and addrefs by the one, would be confidered as impertinence and foppery by the other: Nay, fo opposite is your common deportment from that of some other nations, that one of your own countrymen, in the relation of his travels, obferves, that the Persians, even of this age, when they fee any man perform unneceffary geftures, fay he is either a fool or a Frenchman. The standard of demeanour being thus unfettled, a Turk, a Moor, an Indian, or inhabitant of any country, whofe cultoms and drefs are widely different from ours, may, in his fentiments, poffefs all the dignity of the human heart, and be infpired by the nobleft paffion that animates the foul, and yet excite the laughter rather than the refpect of an European spectator.

" When I first beheld your famous Parisian stage-heroine in one of her principal parts, her attitudes feemed fo violent, and the toffed her arms around with fuch extravagance, that the put me in mind of a wind-mill under the agitation of a hard gale; while her voice and features exhibited the lively reprefentation of an English fcold. The action of your favourite male performer was, in my opinion, equally unnatural; he appeared with the affected airs of a dancing-master; at the most pathetic junctures of his fate, he lifted up his hands above his head, like a tumbler going to vault, and fpoke as if his throat had been obstructed by an hair-brush; yet, when I compared their manners with those of the people before whom they performed, and made allowance for that exaggeration which obtains on all theatres, I was infenfibly reconciled to their method of performance, and I could diftinguish abundance of merit beneath that oddity of appearance."

The chevalier, perceiving Peregrine a little irritated at what he had faid, afked pardon for the liberty he had taken in cenfuring the English players, affuring him that he had an infinite veneration for the British learning, genius, and tafte, which were fo juftly diffinguished in the world of letters; and that, notwithstanding the feverity of his criticism, he thought the theatre of London much better fupplied with actors than that of Paris. The young gentleman thanked him for his polite condefcention, at which Pallet exulted, faying, with a fhake of the head, " I believe fo too, Monfieur;" and the phyfician, impatient of T ij the difpute in which he had bore no fhare, obferved, with a fupercilious air, that the modern ftage was altogether beneath the notice of one who had an idea of ancient magnificence and execution; that plays ought to be exhibited at the expence of the ftate, as those of Sophocles were by the Athenians; and that proper judges fhould be appointed for receiving or rejecting all fuch performances as are offered to the public.

He then defcribed the theatre at Rome, which contained eighty thousand spectators, gave them a learned difquifition into the nature of the perfona, or mask, worn by the Roman actors, which (he faid) was a machine that covered the whole head, furnished on the infide with a brazen concavity, that, by reverberating the found, as it iffued from the mouth, raifed the voice, fo as to render it audible to fuch an extended audience. He explained the difference between the faltator and declamator, one of whom acted, while the other rehearfed the part; and from thence took occasion to mention the perfections of their pantomimes, who were fo amazingly diftinct in the exercise of their art, that a certain prince of Pontus, being at the court of Nero, and feeing one of them reprefent a ftory, begged him of the emperor, in order to employ him as an interpreter among barbarous nations, whofe language he did not understand. Nay, divers cynic philofophers, who had condemned this entertainment unfeen, when they chanced to be eye witneffes of their admirable dexterity, expressed their forrow for having fo long debarred themselves of fuch rational enjoyment.

He diffented, however, from the opinion of Peregrine, who, as a proof of their excellence, had advanced, that fome of the Englifh actors fancied themfelves the very thing they reprefented, and recounted a ftory from Lucian, of a certain celebrated pantomime, who, in acting the part of Ajax in his frenzy, was transported into a real fit of delirium, during which he tore to pieces the clothes of that actor who stalked before him, beating the stage with iron shoes, in order to increase the noife, fnatched an inftrument from one of the musicians, and broke it over the head of him who represented Ulyss; and, running to the confular bench, mistook a couple of fenators for the sheep which were to be flain. The audience applauded him to the fkies; but fo confcious was the mimic of his own extravagance, when he recovered the ufe of his reafon, that he actually fell fick with mortification; and, being afterwards defired to re-act the piece, flatly refufed to appear in any fuch character, faying, that the fhorteft follies were the beft, and that it was fufficient for him to have been a madman once in his life.

CHAPTER LII.

THE doctor, being fairly engaged on the fubject of the ancients, would have proceeded the Lord knows how far, without hefitation, had not he been interrupted by the arrival of Mr. Jolter, who, in great confusion, told them, that Pipes, having affronted a foldier, was then furrounded in the ftreet, and would certainly be put to death, if fome perfon of authority did not immediately interpole in his behalf.

Peregrine no fooner learned the danger of his trufty fquire, than, fnatching up his fword, he ran down ftairs, and was followed by the chevalier, entreating him to leave the affair to his management. Within ten yards of the door they found Tom with his back to a wall, defending himfelf manfully with a mopflick against the affault of three or four foldiers, who, at fight of the Maltefe crofs, defifted from the attack, and were taken into cuftody by order of the knight. One of the aggreffors, being an Irifhman, begged to be heard with great importunity, before he should be fent to the guard; and, by the mediation of Pickle, was accordingly brought into the hotel, with his companions, all three bearing upon their heads and faces evident marks of their adverfary's prowefs and dexterity. The fpokefman being confronted with Pipes, informed the company, that, having by accident met with Mr. Pipes, whom he confidered as his countryman, though fortune had disposed of them in different fervices, he in-T iii vited him to drink a glafs of wine, and accordingly carried him to a cabaret, where he introduced him to his comrades; but, in the course of the conversation, which turned upon the power and greatnefs of the kings of France and England, Mr. Pipes had been pleafed to treat his Most Christian Majesty with great difrefpect; and when he (the entertainer) expoftulated with him in a friendly manner about his impolite behaviour, obferving, that he being in the French fervice, would be under the neceffity of refenting his abufe, if he did not put a ftop to it before the other gentlemen of the cloth fhould comprehend his meaning, he had fet them all three at defiance, diffionoured him in particular with the opprobrious epithet of rebel to his native king and country, and even drank (in broken French) to the perdition of Lewis and all his adherents ! that, compelled by this outrageous conduct, he, as the perfon who had recommended him to their fociety, had, in vindication of his own character, demanded fatisfaction of the delinquent, who, on pretence of fetching a fword, had gone to his lodging, from whence he all of a fudden fallied upon them with the mopflick, which he employed in the annoyance of them all without diffinction, fo that they were obliged to draw in their own defence.

Pipes, being queftioned by his mafter with regard to the truth of this account, owned that every circumstance was justly reprefented; faying, he did not value their cheefe-toafters a pinch of oakum; and that, if the gentleman had not fhot in betwixt them, he would have trimmed them to fuch a tune, that they fhould not have had a whole yard to fquare. Peregrine reprimanded him fharply for his unmannerly behaviour, and infifted upon his afking pardon of those he had injured upon the spot. But no confideration was efficacious enough to produce fuch conceffion; to this command he was both deaf and dumb, and the repeated threats of his mafter had no more effect than if they had been addreffed to a marble statue. At length our hero, incenfed at his obstinacy, started up, and would have chaftifed him with manual operation, had not he been prevented by the chevalier, who found means to moderate his indignation fo far, that he contented himfelf with difmiffing the offender from his fervice; and after having obtained the difcharge of the prifoners, gave them a Louis to drink, by way of recompense for the difgrace and damage they had furtained.

The knight, perceiving our young gentleman very much ruffled at this accident, and reflecting upon the extraordinary deportment and appearance of his valet, whofe hair had by this time adopted a grizzled hue, imagined he was fome favourite domeftic, who had grown gray in the fervice of his mafter's family, and that of confequence he was uneafy at the facrifice he had made. Swayed by this conjecture, he earneftly folicited in his behalf; but all he could obtain was a promife of re-admitting him into favour on the terms already propofed, or at leaft on condition that he fhould make his acknowledgment to the chevalier, for his want of reverence and refpect for the French monarch.

Upon this condefcention, the culprit was called up ftairs, and made acquainted with the mitigation of his fate; upon which he faid, he would down on his marrowbones to his own mafter, but would be damn'd before he would atk pardon of e'er a Frenchman in Chriftendom. Pickle, exafperated at this blunt declaration, ordered him out of his prefence, and charged him never to appear before his face again; while the officer in vain employed all his influence and addrefs to appeafe his refentment, and about midnight took his leave with marks of mortification at his want of fuccefs.

Next day the company agreed to travel through Flanders in the diligence, by the advice of Peregrine, who was not without hope of meeting with fome adventure or amufement in that carriage; and Jolter took care to fecure places for them all: It being refolved that the valet de chambre and the doctor's man fhould attend the vehicle on horfeback; and as for the forlorn Pipes, he was left to reap the fruits of his own flubborn difpolition, notwithftanding the united efforts of the whole triumvirate, who endeavoured to procure his pardon.

Every previous meafure being thus taken, they fet out from Lifle about fix in the morning, and found themfelves in the company of a female adventurer, a very handfome young lady, a Capuchin, and a Rotterdam Jew. Our young gentleman, being the first of this fociety that en-T iiij tered, furveyed the ftrangers with an attentive eye, and feated himfelf immediately behind the beautiful unknown, who at once attracted his attention. Pallet, feeing another lady unengaged, in imitation of his friend, took poffeffion of her neighbourhood; the phyfician paired with the prieft, and Jolter fat down by the Jew.

The machine had not proceeded many furlongs, when Pickle, accofting the fair incognita, congratulated himfelf upon his happinefs in being the fellow-traveller of fo charming a lady. She, without the least referve or affectation, thanked him for his compliment, and replied with a fprightly air, that now they were embarked in one common bottom, they must club their endeavours to make one another as happy as the nature of their fituation would permit them to be. Encouraged by this frank intimation, and, captivated by her fine black eyes and eafy behaviour, he attached himfelf to her from that moment; and, in a little time, the conversation became fo particular, that the Capuchin thought proper to interfere in the discourse, in such a manner as gave the youth to underfland that he was there on purpose to superintend her conduct. He was doubly rejoiced at this difcovery, in confequence of which he hoped to profit in his addreffes, not only by the young lady's reftraint, that never fails to operate in behalf of the lover, but alfo by the corruptibility of her guardian, whom he did not doubt of rendering propitious to his caufe. Flushed with these expectations, he behaved with uncommon complacency to the father, who was charmed with the affability of his carriage, and on the faith of his generofity, abated of his vigilance fo much, that our hero carried on his fuit without further moleftation ; while the painter, in figns and loud burfts of laughter, converfed with his Dulcinia, who was perfectly well verfed in thefe fimple expressions of fatisfaction, and had already found means to make a dangerous invafion upon his heart.

Nor were the governor and phyfician unemployed, while their friends interested themfelves in this agreeablemanner. Jolter no fooner perceived the Hollander was a Jew, than he entered into an investigation of the Hebrew tongue, in which he was a connoisfeur; and the doctor, at the fame time attacked the mendicant on the ridiculous maxims of his order, together with the impolitions of prieft-craft in general, which (he observed) prevail fo much among those who profess the Roman Catholic religion.

Thus coupled, each committee enjoyed their own conversation apart, without any danger of encroachment; and all were fo intent upon their feveral topics, that they fcarce allowed themfelves a fmall interval in viewing the defolation of Menin, as they paffed through that ruined frontier. About twelve o'clock they arrived at Courtray, where the horfes are always changed, and the company halt an hour for refreshment. Here Peregrine handed his charmer into an apartment, where fhe was joined by the other lady; and, on pretence of feeing fome of the churches in town, put himfelf under the direction of the Capuchin, from whom he learned that the young lady was wife to a French gentleman, to whom the had been married about a year, and that fhe was now on her journey to vifit her mother, who lived in Bruffels, and who at that time laboured under a lingering diftemper, which, in all probability, would foon put a period to her life. He then launched out in praise of her daughter's virtue and conjugal affection; and laftly told him, that he was her father confessor, and pitched upon to be her conductor through Flanders, by her hufband, who, as well as his wife, placed the utmost confidence in his prudence and integrity.

Pickle eafily comprehended the meaning of this infinuation, and took the hint accordingly. He tickled the prieft's vanity, with extraordinary encomiums upon the difinterefted principles of his order, which were detached from all worldly purfuits, and altogether devoted to the eternal falvation of mankind. He applauded their patience, humility, and learning, and lavithed a world of praife upon their talent in preaching, which (he faid) had more than once operated fo powerfully upon him, that, had he not been reftrained by certain confiderations which he could not poffibly wave, he fhould have embraced their tenets, and begged admiffion into their fraternity: But, as the circumftances of his fate would not permit him to take fuch a falutary meafure for the prefent, he entreated the good father to accept a fmall token of his love and refpect, for the benefit of that convent to which he belonged. So faying, he pulled out a purfe of ten guineas, which the Capuchin obferving, turned his head another way, and, lifting up his arm, difplayed a pocket almost as high as his collar bone, in which he deposited the money.

This proof of affection for the order produced a fudden and furprifing effect upon the friar. In the transport of his zeal he wrung this femi-convert's hand, fhowered a thousand benedictions upon his head, and exhorted him, with the tears flowing from his eyes, to perfect the great work which the finger of God had begun in his heart; and, as an inftance of his concern for the welfare of his precious foul, the holy brother promifed to recommend him ftrenuoufly to the pious admonitions of the young woman under his care, who was a perfect faint upon earth, and endowed with the peculiar gift of mollifying the hearts of obdurate finners. " O father ! (cried the hypocritical projector, who by this time perceived that his money was not thrown away) if I could be favoured but for one half hour with the private inftruction of that infpired devotee, my mind prefages, that I should be a ftrayed sheep brought back into the fold, and that I should find eafy entrance at the gates of heaven! There is fomething fupernatural in her afpect; I gaze upon her with the most pious fervour, and my whole foul is agitated with tumults of hope and defpair !" Having pronounced this rhapfody with transport half natural and half affected, the prieft affured him, that thefe were operations of the fpirit, which must not be repressed; and comforted him with the hope of enjoying the bleffed interview which he defired, protefting, that, as far as his influence extended, his wifh fhould be that very evening indulged. The gracious pupil thanked him for his benevolent concern, which he fwore fhould not be fquandered upon an ungrateful object; and the reft of the company interrupting the conversation, they returned in a body to the inn, where they dined all together, and the ladies were perfuaded to be our hero's guests.

As the fubjects on which they had been engaged before dinner were not exhaufted, each brace refumed their former theme when they were replaced in the diligence. 'The painter's miftrefs finished her conquest, by exerting her fkill in the art of ogling, accompanied by frequent bewitching fighs, and fome tender French fongs, that the fung with fuch pathetic expression, as quite melted the resolution of Pallet, and utterly subdued his affection: And he, to convince her of the importance of her victory, gave a specimen of his own talents, by entertaining her with that celebrated English ditty, the burden of which begins with, The pigs they lie with their arfes bare.

CHAPTER LIII.

He makes fome progrefs in her affections; is interrupted by a diffute between Jolter and the Jew; appeafes the wrath of the Capuchin, who procures for him an interview with his fair enflaver, in which he finds himfelf deceived.

PEREGRINE, meanwhile, employed all his infinuation and addrefs in practifing upon the heart of the Capuchin's fair charge. He had long ago declared his paffion, not in the fuperficial manner of a French gallant, but with all the ardour of an enthufiast. He had languished, vowed, flattered, kiffed her hand by ftealth, and had no reafon to complain of his reception. Though, by a man of a lefs fanguine disposition, her particular complaisance would have been deemed equivocal, and perhaps nothing more than the effect of French breeding and conftitutional vivacity, he gave his own qualifications credit for the whole, and with thefe fentiments carried on the attack with fuch unabating vigour, that fhe was actually prevailed upon to accept a ring, which he prefented as a token of his efteem; and every thing proceeded in a most prosperous train, when they were disturbed by the governor and Ifraelite, who in the heat of difputation raifed their voices, and poured forth fuch effusions of gutturals, as fet our lover's teeth on edge. As they fpoke in a language unknown to every one in the carriage but themfelves, and looked at each other with mutual animofity and rancour, Peregrine defired to know the caufe of their contention. Upon which Jolter exclaimed in a furious tone, " This learned Levite, forfooth, has the impudence to tell me that I don't understand Hebrew; and affirms, that the word Benoni fignifies child of joy ; whereas I can prove, and indeed have already faid enough to convince any reafonable man, that in the Septuagint it is rightly translated into fon of my forrow." Having thus explained himfelf to his pupil, he turned to the prieft, with intention to appeal to his determination; but the Jew pulled him by the fleeve with great eagerness, faying, "For the love of God be quiet, the Capuchin will difcover who we are !" Jolter, offended at this conjunction, echoed "Who we are !" with great emphasis; and repeating nos poma natamus, afked ironically to which of the tribes the Jew thought he belonged ? The Levite, affronted at his comparing him to a ball of horfe-dung, replied, with a molt fignificant grin, " To the tribe of Illachar." His antagonist, taking the advantage of his unwillingness to be known by the friar, and prompted by revenge for the freedom he had ufed, answered in the Freuch language, that the judgment of God was still manifest upon their whole race, not only in their being in the ftate of exiles from their native land, but alfo in the fpite of their hearts and pravity of their dispositions, which demonstrate them to be the genuine offspring of those who crucified the Saviour of the world.

His expectation was, however, defeated; the prieft himfelf was too deeply engaged to attend to the debates of other people. The physician, in the pride and infolence of his learning, had undertaken to difplay the abfurdity of the Christian faith; having already (as he thought) confuted the Capuchin, touching the points of belief in which the Roman Catholics differ from the reft of the world. But not contented with the imagined victory he had gained, he began to ftrike at the fundamentals of religion; and the father, with incredible forbearance, fuffored him to make very free with the doctrine of the Trinity: But, when he levelled the fhafts of his ridicule at the immaculate conception of the Bleffed Virgin, the good man's patience forfook him, his eyes feemed to kindle with indignation, he trembled in every joint, and uttered with a loud voice, "You are an abominable-I will not call thee heretic, for thou art worfe (if poslible) than a Jew; you deferve to be enclosed in a furnace seven times heated, and I have a good mind to lodge an information against you with the governor of Ghent, that you may be apprehended and punished an an impious blafphemer."

This menace operated like a charm on all prefent. The doctor was confounded, the governor difmayed, the Levite's teeth chattered, the painter was aftonished at the general confusion, the caufe of which he could not comprehend; and Pickle himfelf, not a little alarmed, was obliged to use all his interest and affiduity in appealing this fon of the church, who at length, in confideration of the friendship he professed for the young gentleman, confented to forgive what had paffed, but abfolutely refufed to fit in contact with fuch a profane wretch, whom he looked upon as a fiend of darknefs fent by the enemy of mankind to poifon the minds of weak people; fo that after having croffed himfelf, and muttered certain exorcifms, he infifted upon the doctor's changing places with the Jew, who approached the offended ecclefiaftic in an agony of fear.

Matters being thus compromifed, the conversation flowed in a more general channel; and without the intervention of any other accident, or bone of contention, the carriage arrived at the city of Ghent about feven in the evening. Supper being bespoke for the whole company, our adventurer and his friends went out to take a superficial view of the place, leaving his new mistrefs to the pious exhortations of her confessor, whom (as we have already observed) he had secured in his interest. This zealous mediator spoke for warmly in his commendation, and interested her conficience for much in the affair, that the could not result her helping-hand to the great work of his conversion, and promised to grant the interview he defired.

This agreeable piece of intelligence, which the Capuchin communicated to Peregrine at his return, elevated his fpirits to fuch a degree, that he fhone at fupper with uncommon brilliance, in a thoufand fallies of wit and pleafantry, to the admiration and delight of all prefent, efpecially of his fair Fleming, who feemed quite captivated by his perfon and behaviour.

The evening being thus fpent to the fatisfaction of all parties, the company broke up, and retifed to their feveral apartments, when our lover, to his unspeakable mortification, learned that the two ladies were obliged to lie in the fame room, all the other chambers of the inn being pre-occupied. When he imparted this difficulty to the prieft, that charitable father, who was very fruitful in expedients, affured him, that his fpiritual concerns fhould not be obstructed by such a slender impediment; and accordingly availed himfelf of his prerogative, by going into his daughter's chamber when the was almost undreffed, and leading her into his own, on pretence of adminiftering falutary food for her foul. Having brought the two votaries together, he prayed for fuccels to the operations of grace, and left them to their mutual meditations, after having conjured them in the most folemn manner to let no impure sentiments, or temptations of the flesh, interfere with the hallowed defign of their meeting.

The reverend interceffor being gone, and the door faftened on the infide, the pfeudo-convert, transported with his paffion, threw himfelf at Amanda's feet; and begging fhe would fpare him the tedious form of addreffes, which the nature of their interview would not permit him to observe, began with all the impetuosity of love to make the most by the occasion. But whether she was displeased by the intrepidity and affurance of his behaviour, thinking herfelf entitled to more courtfhip and refpect, or was really better fortified with chaftity than he or his procurer had fuppoled her to be, certain it is, fhe expressed refentment and furprife at his boldnefs and prefumption, and upbraided him with having imposed upon the charity of the friar. The young gentleman was really as much aftonished at this rebuff, as she pretended to be at his declaration, and earneftly entreated her to confider how precious the moments were, and for once facrifice fuperfluous ceremony to the happiness of one who adored her with fuch a flame, as could not fail to confume his vitals, if the would not deign to blefs him with her favour. Notwithstanding all his tears, vows, and fupplications, his perfonal accomplifhments, and the tempting opportunity, all that he could obtain was an acknowledgment of his having made an imprefiion upon her heart, which fhe hoped the dictates of her duty would enable her to erafe. This confession he confidered as a delicate confent; and, obeying the impulse of his love, fnatched her up in his arms, with an intention of feizing that which the declined to give; when this French Lucretia, unable to defend her virtue any other way, fcreamed aloud; and the Capuchin, fetting his thoulder to the door, forced it open, and entered in an affected ecftafy of amazement. He lifted up his hands and eyes, and pretended to be thunderftruck at the difcovery he had made; then, in broken exclamations, profeffed his horror at the wicked intention of our hero, who had covered fuch a damnable fcheme with the mafk of religion.

In fhort, he performed his cue with fuch dexterity, that the lady, believing him in earneft, begged he would forgive the ftranger, on account of his youth and education, which had been tainted by the errors of herefy : and he was on thefe confiderations content to accept the fubmiffion of our hero, who, far from renouncing his expectations, notwithftanding this mortifying repulfe, confided fo much in his own talents, and the confeffion which his miftrefs had made, that he refolved to make another effort, to which nothing could have prompted him but the utmost turbulence of unruly defire.

CHAPTER LIV.

He makes another effort towards the accompliftment of his wifh, which is poftponed by a ftrange accident.

He directed his valet de chambre, who was a thoroughpaced pimp, to kindle fome ftraw in the yard, and then pafs by the door of her apartment, crying (with a loud voice) that the houfe was on fire. This alarm brought both ladies out of their chamber in a moment; and Peregrine, taking the advantage of their running to the ftreet door, entered the room, and concealed himfelf under a large table that ftood in an unobferved corner. The nymphs, as foon as they underftood the caufe of his Mercury's fuppofed affright, returned to their apartment, and, having faid their prayers, undreffed themfelves, and went to bed. This fcene, which fell under the obfervation of Pickle, did not at all contribute to the cooling of his concupifcence, but, on the contrary, inflamed him to fuch a degree, that he could fcarce reftrain his impatience, until by her breathing deep, he concluded the fellow lodger of his Amanda was afleep. This welcome note no fooner faluted his ears, than he crept to his charmer's bed-fide, and, placing himfelf on his knees, gently laid hold on her white hand, and preffed it to his lips. She had just begun to clofe her eyes, and enjoy the agreeable opprefion of flumber, when the was roufed by this rape, at which fhe flarted, pronouncing, in a tone of furprife and difmay, " My God! who's that ?" The lover, with the most infinuating humility, befought her to hear him; vowing, that his intention in approaching her thus, was not to violate the laws of decency, or that indelible efteem which fhe had engraven on his heart, but to manifest his forrow and contrition for the umbrage he had given, to pour forth the overflowings of his foul, and tell her that he neither could nor would furvive her difpleafure. Thefe, and many other pathetic proteftations, accompanied with fighs and tears, and other expressions of grief, which our hero had at command, could not fail to melt the tender heart of the amiable Fleming, already prepoffeffed in favour of his qualifications. She fympathized fo much with his affliction as to weep in her turn, when the reprefented the impoflibility of her rewarding his paffion; and he, feizing the favourable moment, reinforced his folicitations with fuch irrefiftible transports, that her refolution gave way, the began to breathe quick, expressed her fear of being overheard by the other lady, and, with an ejaculation of " O Heavens ! I'm undone ;" fuffered him (after a faint ftruggle) to make a lodgement upon the covered way of her bed. Her honour, however, was fecured for the prefent, by a ftrange fort of knocking upon the wainfcot, at the other end of the room, hard by the bed in which the female adventurer lay.

Surprifed at this circumftance, the lady begged him for heaven's fake to retreat, or her reputation would be ruined for ever: But when he reprefented to her, that her character would run a much greater rifk if he fhould be detected in withdrawing, fhe confented with great trepidation to his flay; and they liftened in filence to the fequel of the noife that alarmed them. This was no other than an expedient of the painter, to awaken his Dulcinea, with whom he had made an affignation, or at leaft interchanged fuch fignals as he thought amounted to a firm appointment. His nymph being difturbed in her first fleep, immediately understood the found, and, true to the agreement, role, and unbolting the door as fostly as possible, gave him admittance, leaving it open for his more commodious retreat.

While this happy gallant was employed in difengaging himfelf from the difhabille in which he had entered, the Capuchin, fuspecting that Peregrine would make another attempt upon his charge, had crept filently to the apartment, in order to reconnoitre, left the adventure should be achieved without his knowledge; a circumftance that would deprive him of the profits he might expect from his privity and concurrence. Finding the door unlatched, his fuspicion was confirmed, and he made no feruple of creeping into the chamber on all four ; fo that the painter, having ftripped himfelf to the fhirt, in groping about for his Dulcinea's bed, chanced to lay his hand upon the fhaven crown of the father's head, which, by a circular motion, the prieft began to turn round in his grafp, like a ball in a focket, to the furprife and confternation of poor Pallet, who, having neither penetration to comprehend the cafe, nor refolution to withdraw his fingers from this strange object of his touch, stood fweating in the dark, and venting ejaculations with great devotion. The friar, tired with this exercife, and the painful pofture in which he ftooped, raifed himfelf gradually upon his feet, heaving up at the fame time the hand of the painter, whofe terror and amazement increased to fuch a degree at this unaccountable elevation, that his faculties began to fail; and his palm, in the confusion of his fright, fliding over the prieft's forehead, one of his fingers happened to flip into his mouth, and was immediately fecured between the Capuchin's teeth, with as firm a fixture as if it had been fcrewed in a blackfmith's vice. The painter was fo much difordered by this fudden fnap, which tortured him to the bone, that, forgetting all other confiderations, he roared aloud, " Murder ! a fire ! a trap, a trap ! help, Chriftians, for the love of God, help !" Our hero, confounded by these exclamations, which he Vol. II. TJ knew would foon fill the room with fpectators, and incenfed at his own mortifying difappointment, was obliged to guit the untafted banquet, and approaching the caufe of his misfortune, just as his tormentor had thought proper to releafe his finger, difcharged fuch a hearty flap between his shoulders, as brought him to the ground with hideous bellowing; then retiring unperceived to his own chamber, was one of the first who returned with a light, on pretence of having been alarmed with his cries. The Capuchin had taken the fame precaution, and followed Peregrine into the room, pronouncing Benedicite, and croffing himfelf with many marks of aftonifhment. The phyfician and Jolter appearing at the fame time, the unfortunate painter was found lying naked on the floor, in all the agony of horror and difmay, blowing upon his left hand, that hung dangling from the elbow. The circumftance of his being found in that apartment, and the attitude of his affliction, which was extremely ridiculous, provoked the doctor to a finile, and produced a finall relaxation in the feverity of the governor's countenance; while Pickle, teftifying furprife and concern, lifted him from the ground, and inquired into the caufe of his prefent fituation. Having, after fome recollection, and fruitlefs endeavours to fpeak, recovered the ufe of his tongue, he told them that the houfe was certainly haunted by evil fpirits, by which he had been conveyed (he knew not how) into that apartment, and afflicted with all the tortures of hell: That one of them had made itfelf fenfible to his feeling, in the fhape of a round ball of fmooth flefh, which turned round under his hand, like an aftronomer's globe, and then rifing up to a furprifing height, was converted into a machine that laid hold on his finger, by a fnap, and having pinned him to the fpot, he continued for fome moments in unfpeakable agony. At laft he faid the engine feemed to melt away from his finger, and he received a fudden thwack upon his fhoulders, as if difcharged by the arm of a giant, which overthrew him in an inftant upon the floor. The prieft hearing this strange account, pulled out of one of his pouches a piece of confecrated candle, which he lighted immediately, and muttered certain mysterious conjurations. Jolter, imagining that Pallet was drunk, fhook his head, faying, he believed the fpirit was no where but in his own brain. The phyfician for once condefcended to be a wag, and looking towards one of the beds, observed, that in his opinion, the painter had been milled by the fleth, and not by the spirit. The fair Fleming lay in filent aftonilhment and affright; and her fellow-lodger, in order to acquit herfelf of all fuspicion, exclaimed with incredible volubility against the author of this uproar, who (she did not doubt) had concealed himfelf in the apartment, with a view of perpetrating fome wicked attempt upon her precious virtue, and was punifhed and prevented by the immediate interpolition of Heaven. At her defire, therefore, and at the earnest folicitation of the other lady, he was conducted to his own bed, and the chamber being evacuated, they locked their door, fully refolved to admit no more vifitants for that night : While Peregrine, mad with feeing the delicious morfel fnatched (as it were) from his very lip, ftalked through the paffage like a ghoft, in hope of finding fome opportunity of re-entering, till the day beginning to break, he was obliged to retire, curfing the idiotical conduct of the painter, which had fo unluckily interfered with his delight.

CHAPTER LV.

They depart from Ghent. Our hero engages in a political difpute with his miftrefs, whom he offends, and pacifies with lubmiflion. He practifes an expedient to detain the carriage at Aloft, and confirms the prieft in his interest.

NEXT day, about one o'clock, after having feen every thing remarkable in town, and been prefent at the execution of two youths, who were hanged for ravifhing a whore, they took their departure from Ghent, in the fame carriage which had brought them thither; and the converfation turning upon the punifhment they had feen inflicted, the Flemifh beauty expressed great fympathy and compaffion for the unhappy fufferers, who (as the had been informed) had fallen victims to the malice of the accufer. Her fentiments were efpoufed by all the company, except the French lady of pleafure, who, thinking the credit of the fifterhood concerned in the affair, bitterly inveighed against the profligacy of the age, and particularly the bafe and villanous attempts of man upon the chaftity of the weaker fex; faying, with a look of indignation, directed to the painter, that, for her own part, flie fhould never be able to manifest the acknowledgment fhe owed to Providence, for having protected her last night from the wicked aims of unbridled lust. This obfervation introduced a feries of jokes, at the expence of Pallet, who hung his ears, and fat with a filent air of dejection, fearing that, through the malevolence of the phyfician, his adventure might reach the ears of his wife. Indeed, though we have made fhift to explain the whole transaction to the reader, it was an inextricable myftery to every individual in the diligence : Becaufe the part which was acted by the Capuchin, was known to himfelf alone; and even he was utterly ignorant of Pickle's being concerned in the affair; fo that the greatest share of the painter's fufferings were fuppofed to be the exaggerations of his own extravagant imagination.

In the midft of their difcourfe on this extraordinary fubject, the driver told them, that they were now on the very fpot where a detachment of the allied army had been intercepted and cut off by the French; and, ftopping the vehicle, entertained them with a local defeription of the battle of Melle. Upon this occasion, the Flemish lady, who, fince her marriage, had become a keen partizan for the French, gave a minute detail of all the circumstances, as they had been reprefented to her by her hufband's brother, who was in the action. This account, which funk the number of the French to fixteen, and raifed that of the allies to twenty thousand men, was fo difagreeable to truth, as well as to the laudable partiality of Peregrine, that he ventured to contradict her affertions, and a fierce dispute commenced, that not only regarded the prefent question, but also comprehended all the battles in which the Duke of Marlborough had commanded against Louis the Fourteenth. In the course of these debates, she divefted the great general of all the glory he had acquired, by affirming, that every victory he gained was purpofely loft by the French generals, in order to bring the fchemes of Madame de Maintenon into diferedit ; and, as a particular inftance, alleged, that while the citadel of Lifle was befieged, Louis faid, in prefence of the Dauphin, that, if the allies fhould be obliged to raife the fiege, he would immediately declare his marriage with that lady; upon which the fon feut private orders to Marshal Boufflers to furrender the place. This strange allegation was fupported by the affeverations of the prieft and the courtezan, and admitted as truth by the governor, who pretended to have heard it from good authority; while the doctor fat neutral, as one who thought it fcandalous to know the hiftory of fuch modern events. The Ifraelite, being a true Dutchman, lifted himfelf under the banners of our hero, who, in attempting to demonstrate the abfurdity and improbability of what they had advanced, raifed fuch a hue and cry against himself, and being infensibly heated in the altercation, irritated his Amanda to fuch a degree, that her charming eyes kindled with fury, and he faw great reason to think, that, if he did not fall upon fome method to deprecate her wrath, fhe would in a twinkling facrifice all her efteem for him to her own zeal for the glory of the French nation. Moved by this apprehension, his ardour cooled by degrees, and he infenfibly detached himfelf from the argument, leaving the whole care of fupporting it on the Jew, who, finding himfelf deferted, was fain to yield at diferetion; fo that the French remained mafters of the field, and their young heroine refumed her good humour.

Our hero having prudently fubmitted to the fuperior intelligence of his fair enflaver, began to be haraffed with the fears of lofing her for ever, and fet his invention at work, to contrive fome means of indemnifying himfelf for his affiduities, prefents, and the difappointments he had already undergone. On pretence of enjoying a free air, he mounted the box, and employed his elocution and generofity with fuch fuccefs, that the driver undertook to difable the diligence from proceeding beyond the town of Aloft for that day; and, in confequence of his promile, gently overturned it when they were but a mile flort of that baiting place. He had taken his meafures fo difcreetly, that this accident was attended with no other inconvenience than a fit of fear that took poffeffion of the U iij ladies, and the necessity to which they were reduced by the declaration of the coachman, who, upon examining the carriage, affured the company that the axle-tree had given way, and advifed them to walk forward to the inn, while he would jog after them at a flow pace, and do his endeavour the damage fhould be immediately repaired. Peregrine pretended to be very much concerned at what had happened, and even curfed the driver for his inadvertency, expressing infinite impatience to be at Bruffels, and wifhing that this misfortune might not detain them another night upon the road; but when his understrapper, according to his inftructions, came afterwards to the inn, and gave them to understand, that the workman he had employed could not poffibly refit the machine in lefs than fix hours, the crafty youth affected to lofe all temper, ftormed at his emiflary, whom he reviled in the moft opprobrious terms, and threatened to cane for his mifconduct. The fellow protefted, with great humility, that their being overturned was owing to the failure of the axle-tree, and not to his want of care or dexterity in driving; though rather than be thought the caufe of incommoding him, he would inquire for a post-chaife, in which he might depart for Bruffels immediately. This expedient Pickle rejected, unlefs the whole company could be accommodated in the fame manner; and he had been previoufly informed by the driver, that the town could not furnish more than one vehicle of that fort. His governor, who was quite ignorant of his fcheme, reprefented, that one night would foon be paffed, and exhorted him to bear this finall difappointment with a good grace, efpecially as the houfe feemed to be well provided for their entertainment, and the company fo much difpofed to be fociable. The Capuchin, who had found his account in cultivating the acquaintance of the young ftranger, was not ill pleafed at this event, which might, by protracting the term of their intercourfe, yield him fome opportunity of profiting still further by his liberality : He therefore joined Mr. Jolter in his admonitions, congratulating himfelf upon the profpect of enjoying his conversation a little longer than he had expected. Our young gentleman received a compliment to the fame purpofe from the Hebrew, who had that day exercifed his gallantry upon the French coquette, and was not without hope of reaping the fruits of his attention, his rival, the painter, being quite difgraced and dejected by the adventure of last night. As for the doctor, he was too much engroffed in the contemplation of his own importance, to interest himself in the affair, or its confequences, further than by obferving that the European powers ought to establish public games, like those that were celebrated of old in Greece; in which cafe, every flate would be fupplied with fuch dexterous charioteers, as would drive a machine at full fpeed, within a hair's breadth of a precipice, without any danger of its being overthrown. Peregrine could not help yielding to their remonstrances, and united complaifance, for which he thanked them in very polite terms, and his paffion feeming to fubfide, propofed that they fhould amufe themfelves in walking round the ramparts. He hoped to enjoy fome private converfation with his admired Fleming, who had this whole day behaved with remarkable referve. The propofal being embraced, he (as ufual) handed her into the ftreet, and took all opportunities of promoting his fuit; but they were attended fo clofely by her father confessor, that he forefaw it would be impracticable to accomplifh his aim, without the connivance of that ecclefiaftic. This he was obliged to purchafe with another purfe, which he offered, and was accepted as a charitable atonement for his criminal behaviour during the interview which the friar had procured for the good of his foul. The benefaction was no fooner made, than the pious mendicant edged off by little and little, till he joined the reft of the company, leaving his generous patron at full liberty to profecute his purpofe. It is not to be doubted that our adventurer made a good use of this occasion: He practifed a thousand flowers of rheroric, and actually exhausted his whole addrefs, in perfuading her to have compassion upon his mifery, and indulge him with another private audience, without which he fhould run distracted, and be guilty of extravagancies which, in the humanity of her difpofition, fhe would weep to fee. But, inftead of complying with his requeft, the chid him feverely for his prefumption, in perfecuting her with his vicious addreffes. She affured him, that although the had fecured a chamber for herfelf U iiij in this place, becaufe fhe had no ambition to be better acquainted with the other lady, he would be in the wrong to difturb her with another nocturnal vifit; for fhe was determined to deny him admittance. The lover was comforted by this hint, which he underftood in the true acceptation, and his paffion being inflamed by the obftacles he had met with, his heart beat high with the profpect of poffeffion. Thefe raptures of expectation produced an inquietude, which difabled him from bearing that fhare of the converfation for which he ufed to be diftinguifhed. His behaviour at fupper was a vicifitude of ftartings and reveries. The Capuchin, imputing this diforder to a fecond repulfe from his charge, began to be invaded with the apprehension of being obliged to refund, and, in a whisper, forbade our hero to defpair.

CHAPTER LVI.

The French coquette entraps the heart of the Jew, againft whom Pallet enters into a configuracy; by which Peregrine is again difappointed, and the Hebrew's incontinence exposed.

MEANWHILE the French fyren, baulked in her defign upon her English cully, who was to eafily disheartened, and hung his ears in manifest despondence, rather than run the rifk of making a voyage that fhould be altogether unprofitable, resolved to practife her charms upon the Dutch merchant. She had already made fuch innovations upon his heart, that he cultivated her with peculiar complacency, gazed upon her with a most libidinous stare, and unbended his afpect into a grin that was truly Ifraelitifh. The painter faw, and was offended at this correfpondence, which he confidered as an infult upon his misfortune, as well as an evident preference of his rival; and, confcious of his own timidity, fwallowed an extraordinary glafs, that his invention might be ftimulated, and his refolution raifed to the contrivance and execution of fome fcheme of revenge. The wine, however, failed in the expected effect, and, without infpiring him with the plan, ferved only to quicken his defire of vengeance; fo that he communicated his purpofe to his friend Peregrine, and begged his affiftance: but our young gentleman was too intent upon his own affair, to mind the concerns of any other perfon; and he declining to be engaged in the project, Pallet had recourfe to the genius of Pickle's valet de chambre, who readily embarked in the undertaking, and invented a plan, which was executed accordingly.

The evening being pretty far advanced, and the company separated into their respective apartments, Pickle repaired, in all the impatience of youth and defire, to the chamber of his charmer, and finding the door unbolted, entered in a transport of joy. By the light of the moon, which fhone through the window, he was conducted to her bed, which he approached in the utmost agitation, and perceiving her to all appearance affeep, effayed to wake her with a gentle kifs; but this method proved ineffectual, becaufe the was determined to fave herfelf the confusion of being an accomplice in his guilt. He repeated the application, murmured a most passionate fulutation in her ear, and took fuch other gentle methods of fignifying his prefence, as perfuaded him that fhe was refolved to fleep, in fpite of all his endeavours : Flushed with this agreeable fuppolition, he locked the door, in order to prevent interruption, and stealing himself under the clothes, fet fortune at defiance, while he held the fair creature circled in his arms.

Neverthelefs, near as he feemed to be to the happy accomplifhment of his defire, his hope was again fruftrated with a frightful noife, which in a moment awaked his Amanda in a fright, and, for the prefent, engaged all his attention. His valet de chambre, whom Pallet had confulted as a confederate in his revenge against the lady of pleafure and her Jewish gallant, had hired of certain Bohemians, who chanced to lodge at the inn, a jack-afs, adorned with bells, which, when every body was retired to reft, and the Hebrew fuppofed to be bedded with his mistress, they led up stairs into a long thoroughfare, from which the chambers were detached on each fide. The painter, perceiving the lady's door a-jar, according to his expectation, mounted this animal, with intention to ride into the room, and difturb the lovers in the midft of their mutual endearments; but the afs, true to its kind, finda ing himfelf bestrid by an unknown rider, instead of advancing in obedience to his conductor, retreated backwards to the other end of the paffage, in fpite of all the efforts of the painter, who fpurred, and kicked, and pommelled to no purpofe. It was the noife of this contention between Pallet and the als which invaded the ears of Peregrine and his miftrefs, neither of whom could form the leaft rational conjecture about the caufe of fuch ftrange diffurbance, which increased as the animals approached the apartment. At length, the Bourrique's retrograde motion was obstructed by the door, which it forced open in a twinkling, with one kick, and entered with fuch complication of found, as terrified the lady almost into a fit, and threw her lover into the utmost perplexity and confusion. The painter, finding himfelf thus violently intruded into the bed-chamber of he knew not whom, and dreading the refentment of the poffeffor, who might difcharge a piftol at him, as a robber who had broke into his apartment, was overwhelmed with confternation, and redoubled his exertion, to accomplifh a fpeedy retreat, fweating all the time with fear, and putting up petitions to Heaven for his fafety; but his obstinate companion, regardlefs of his fituation, inflead of fubmitting to his conduct, began to turn round like a mill ftone, the united found of his feet and bells producing a most furprifing concert. The unfortunate rider, whirling about in this manner, would have quitted his feat, and left the beaft to his own amusement, but the rotation was fo rapid, that the terror of a fevere fall hindered him from attempting to difmount, and, in the defperation of his heart, he feized one of its ears, which he pinched to unmercifully, that the creature fet up his throat, and brayed aloud. This hideous exclamation was no fooner heard by the fair Fleming, already chilled by panic, and prepared with fuperstition, than, believing herfelf visited by the devil, who was permitted to punish her for her infidelity to the marriage-bed, fhe uttered a fcream, and began to repeat her pater-noster with a loud voice. Her lover, finding himfelf under the neceffity of retiring, flarted up, and, ftung with the most violent pangs of rage and disappointment, ran directly to the fpot whence this diabolical noife feemed to proceed. There encountering the afs, he difcharged fuch a volley of blows at him and his rider, that the creature carried him off at a round trot, and they roared in unifon all the way. Having thus cleared the room of fuch difagreeable company, he went back to his miftrefs, and affuring her that this was only fome foolifh prank of Pallet, took his leave, with a promife of returning after the quiet of the inn fhould be re-eftablifhed.

In the mean time, the noife of the Bourrique, the cries of the painter, and the lady's fcream, had alarmed the whole houfe; and the afs, in the precipitation of his retreat, feeing people with lights before him, took fhelter in the apartment for which he was at first defigned, just as the Levite, aroufed at the uproar, had quitted his Dulcinea, and was attempting to recover his own chamber unperceived. Seeing himfelf oppofed by fuch an animal, mounted by a tall, meagre, lanthorn-jaw'd figure, half naked, with a white nightcap upon his head, which added to the natural palenels of his complexion, the Jew was forely troubled in mind, and believing it to be an apparition of Balaam and his afs, fled backward with a nimble pace, and crept under the bed, where he lay concealed. Mr. Jolter and the prieft, who were the foremost of those who had been aroused by the noise, were not unmoved when they faw fuch a fpectacle rufhing into the chamber, from whence the lady of pleafure began to fhriek. The governor made a full halt, and the Capuchin difcovered no inclination to proceed. They were, however, by the preflure of the crowd that followed them, thruft forward to the door, through which the vision entered; and there Jolter, with great ceremony, complimented his reverence with the pafs, befeeching him to walk in. The mendicant was too courteous and humble to accept this pre-eminence, and a very earneft difpute enfued; during which the afs, in the courfe of his circuit, fhowed himfelf and rider, and in a trice decided the contest; for, ftruck with this fecond glimpfe, both at one inftant fprung backward with fuch force, as overturned the next men, who communicated the impulse to those that stood behind them, and these again to others; fo that the whole paffage was strewed with a long file of people, that lay in a line, like the fequel and dependence of a pack of cards. In the midft of this havock, our hero returned from his own room with an air of aftonifhment, afking the caufe of this uproar. Receiving fuch hints of intelligence as Jolter's confternation would permit him to give, he fnatched the candle out of his hand, and advanced into the haunted chamber without hefitation, being followed by all prefent, who broke forth into a long and loud peal of laughter, when they perceived the ludicrous fource of their difquiet. The painter himfelf made an effort to join their mirth ; but he had been fo harrowed by fear, and fmarted fo much with the pain of the difcipline he had received from Pickle, that he could not, with all his endeavour, vanquish the ruefulness of his countenance. His attempt ferved only to increase the awkwardnefs of his fituation, which was not at all mended by the behaviour of the coquette, who, furious with her difappointment, flipped on a petticoat and bed-gown, and fpringing upon him, like another Hecuba, with her nails deprived all one fide of his note of the fkin, and would not have left him an eye to fee through, if fome of the company had not refcued him from her unmerciful talons. Provoked at this outrage, as well as by her behaviour to him in the diligence, he publicly explained his intention in entering her chamber in this equipage; and, milling the Hebrew among the spectators, assured them that he muft have abfconded fomewhere in the apartment. In purfuance of this intimation, the room was immediately fearched, and the mortified Levite pulled by the heels from his lurking-place; fo that Pallet had the good fortune at last to transfer the laugh from himself to his rival and the French inamorata, who accordingly underwent the ridicule of the whole audience.

CHAPTER LVII.

Pallet, endeavouring to unravel the myftery of the treatment he had received, falls out of the frying-pan into the fire.

NEVERTHELESS, Pallet was fill confounded and chagrined by one confideration, which was no other than that of his having been fo roughly handled in the chamber belonging (as he found upon inquiry) to the handfome young lady who was under the Capuchin's direction. He recollected, that the door was faft locked when his beaft burft it open; and he had no reafon to believe that any perfon followed him in his irruption: On the other hand, he could not imagine, that fuch a gentle creature would either attempt to commit, or be able to execute, fuch a defperate affault as that which his body had fuftained; and her demeanour was fo modeft and circumfpect, that he durft not harbour the leaft fufpicion of her virtue.

These reflections bewildered him in the labyrinth of thought; he rummaged his whole imagination, endeavouring to account for what had happened. At length he concluded, that either Peregrine, or the devil, or both, must have been at the bottom of the whole affair, and determined, for the fatisfaction of his curiofity, to watch our hero's motions, during the remaining part of the night, fo narrowly, that his conduct, mysterious as it was, should not be able to elude his penetration.

With these fentiments he retired to his own room, after the afs had been reftored to the right owners, and the prieft had visited and confirmed his fair ward, who had been almost distracted with fear. Silence no fooner prevailed again, than he crawled darkling towards her door, and huddled himfelf up in an obfcure corner, from whence he might obferve the ingrefs or egrefs of any human creature. He had not long remained in this pofture, when, fatigued with this adventure, and that of the preceding night, his faculties were gradually overpowered with flumber; and, falling fast asleep, he began to fnore like a whole congregation of Prefbyterians. The Flemish beauty, hearing this difcordant noife in the paffage, began to be afraid of fome new alarm, and very prudently bolted her door; fo that, when her lover wanted to repeat his vifit, he was not only furprifed and incenfed at this difagreeable ferenade, the author of which he did not know, but when compelled by his paffion, which was by this time wound to the highest pitch, he ventured to approach the entrance, he had the extreme mortification to find himfelf fhut out. He durft not knock to fignify his prefence in any other manner, on account of the lady's reputation, which would have greatly fuffered, had the fnorer been waked by his endeavours. Had he known that the perfon who thus thwarted his views was the painter, he would have taken fome effectual ftep to remove him; but he could not conceive what fhould induce Pallet to take up his refidence in that corner; nor could he ufe the affiftance of a light to diftinguifh him, becaufe there was not a candle burning in the houfe.

It is impoffible to defcribe the rage and vexation of our hero, while he continued thus tantalized upon the brink of blifs, after his defire had been exafperated by the circumstances of his two former difappointments He ejaculated a thousand execrations against his own fortune, curfed his fellow-travellers without exception, vowed reyenge against the painter, who had twice confounded his most interesting scheme, and was tempted to execute immediate vengeance upon the unknown caufe of his prefent mifcarriage. In this agony of diftraction did he fweat two whole hours in the paffage, though not without fome faint hopes of being delivered from his tormentor, who, he imagined, upon waking, would undoubtedly fhift his quarters, and leave the field free to his defigns; but when he heard the cock repeat his falutation to the morn, which began to open on the rear of night, he could no longer restrain his indignation. Going to his own chamber, he filled a bafon with cold water, and, ftanding at fome diftance, difcharged it full in the face of the gaping fnorer, who, over and above the furprife occafioned by the application, was almost fuffocated by the liquor that entered his mouth, and ran down into his wind-pipe. While he gafped like a perfon half drowned, without knowing the nature of his difafter, or remembering the fituation in which he fell afleep, Peregrine retired to his own door, and to his no fmall aftonifhment, from a long howl that invaded his ears, learned that the patient was no other than Pallet, who had now for the third time baulked his good fortune.

Enraged at the complicated trefpaffes of this unfortunate offender, he rufhed from his apartment with a horfewhip, and encountering the painter in his flight, overturned him in the paffage. There he exercised the inftrument of his wrath with great feverity, on pretence of miftaking him for fome prefumptuous cur, which had difturbed the repole of the inn; nay, when he called aloud for mercy in a fupplicating tone, and his chaftifer could no longer pretend to treat him as a quadrupcd, fuch was the virulence of the young gentleman's indignation, that he could not help declaring his fatisfaction, by telling Pallet he had richly deferved the punifhment he had undergone, for his madnefs, folly, and impertinence, in contriving and executing fuch idle fchemes, as had no other tendency than that of plaguing his neighbours.

Pallet protefted, with great vehemence, that he was innocent, as the child unborn, of an intention to give umbrage to any perfon whatever, except the Ifraelite and his doxy, who he knew had incurred his difpleafure. " But, as God is my Saviour (faid he), I believe I am perfecuted with witchcraft, and begin to think that damned priest is an agent for the devil; for he has been but two nights in our company, during which I have not closed an eye, but, on the contrary, have been tormented by all the fiends of hell." Pickle peevishly replied, that his torments had been occasioned by his own foolish imagination; and afked him how he came to howl in that corner? The painter, who did not think proper to own the truth, faid, that he had been transported thither by fome preternatural conveyance, and fouled in water by an invifible hand. The youth, in hope of profiting by his absence, advised him to retire immediately to his bed, and by fleep ftrive to comfort his brain, which feemed to be not a little difordered by the want of that refreshment. Pallet himfelf began to be very much of the fame way of thinking; and, in compliance with fuch wholefome counfel, betook himfelf to reft, muttering prayers all the way for the recovery of his own understanding.

Pickle attended him to his chamber, and, locking him up, put the key in his own pocket, that he might not have it in his power to interrupt him again : But, in his return he was met by Mr. Jolter and the doctor, who had been a fecond time alarmed by the painter's cries, and come to inquire about this new adventure. Half frantic with fuch a feries of difappointments, he curfed them in his heart for their unfeafonable appearance. When they queftioned him about Pallet, he told them he had found him ftark ftaring mad, howling in a corner, and wet to the fkin, and conducted him to his room, where he was now abed. The phyfician, hearing this circumstance, made a merit of his vanity; and, under pretence of concern for the patient's welfare, defired he might have an opportunity of examining the fymptoms of his diforder, without lofs of time; alleging that many difeafes might have been stifled in the birth, which afterwards baffled all the endeavours of the medical art. The young gentleman accordingly delivered the key, and once more withdrew into his own chamber, with a view of feizing the first occasion that should prefent itself of renewing his application to his Amanda's door; while the doctor, in his way to Pallet's apartment, hinted to the governor his fuspicion that the patient laboured under that dreadful fymptom called the hydrophobia, which, he observed, had fometimes appeared in perfons who were not previoufly bit by a mad dog. This conjecture he founded upon the howl he uttered when he was fouled with water, and began to recollect certain circumstances of the painter's behaviour for fome days paft, which now he could plainly perceive had prognofficated fome fuch calamity. He then afcribed the diftemper to the violent frights he had lately undergone; affirmed that the affair of the Baftile had made fuch a violent encroachment upon his underftanding, that his manner of thinking and fpeaking was entirely altered. By a theory of his own invention, he explained the effect of fear upon a loofe fystem of nerves, and demonstrated the modus in which the animal spirits operate upon the ideas and power of imagination.

This difquifition, which was communicated at the painter's door, might have lafted till breakfaft, had not Jolter reminded him of his own maxim, Venienti occurrite morbo; upon which he put the key to immediate ufe, and they walked foftly towards the bed, where the patient lay extended at full length in the arms of fleep. The phyfician took notice of his breathing hard, and his mouth being open; and from thefe diagnoftics declared that the liquidum nervofum was intimately affected, and the faliva impregnated with the fpiculated particles of the virus, howfoever contracted. This fentence was ftill farther confirmed by the ftate of his pulfe, which, being full and flow, indicated an oppreffed circulation, from a lofs of elafticity in the propelling arteries. He proposed that he should immediately fuffer a fecond aspersion of water, which would not only contribute to the cure, but alfo certify them beyond all poffibility of doubt, with regard to the ftate of the difease; for it would evidently appear, from the manner in which he would bear the application, whether or not his horror of water amounted to a confirmed hydrophobia. Mr. Jolter, in compliance with this propofal, began to empty a bottle of water, which he found in the room, in a bafon ; when he was interrupted by the prefcriber, who advifed him to use the contents of the chamber-pot, which, being impregnated with falt, would operate more effectually than pure element. Thus directed, the governor lifted up the veffel, which was replete with medicine, and with one turn of his hand difcharged the whole healing inundation upon the ill-omen'd patient, who, waking in the utmost distraction of horror, yelled moft hideoufly, just at the time when Peregrine had brought his miftrefs to a parley, and entertained hopes of being admitted into her chamber.

Terrified at this exclamation, fhe inftantly broke off the treaty, befeeching him to retire from the door, that her honour might receive no injury from his being found in that place : and he had just enough of recollection left to fee the neceffity of obeying the order; in conformity to which he retreated, well nigh deprived of his fenses, and almost perfuaded that fo many unaccountable disappointments must have proceeded from fome supernatural cause, of which the idiot Pallet was no more than the involuntary inftrument.

Meanwhile, the doctor having afcertained the malady of the patient, whofe cries, interrupted by frequent fobs and fighs, he interpreted into the barking of a dog, and having no more falt water at hand, refolved to renew the bath with fuch materials as chance would afford. He actually laid hold of the bottle and bafon; but by this time the painter had recovered the use of his ferses fo well, as to perceive his drift; and, flarting up like a frantic bedlamite, ran directly to his fword, fwearing with many horrid imprecations, that he would murder them both immediately, if he fhould be hanged before dinner. Val. II.  They did not choose to wait the iffue of his threat, but retired with fuch precipitation, that the phyfician had almost diflocated his shoulder, by running against one fide of the entry. Jolter, having pulled the door after him, and turned the key, betook himfelf to flight, roaring aloud for affiftance. His colleague, feeing the door fe-cured, valued himfelf upon his refolution, and exhorted him to return; declaring, that for his own part, he was more afraid of the madman's teeth than of his weapon, and admonishing the governor to re-enter, and execute what they had left undone. "Go in (faid he) without fear or apprehension, and if any accident shall happen to you, either from his flaver or his fword, I will affift you with my advice, which from this flation I can more coolly and diffinctly administer, than I should be able to fupply, if my ideas were difturbed, or my attention engaged in any perfonal concern."

Jolter, who could make no objection to the justness of the conclusion, frankly owned, that he had no inclination to try the experiment; obferving, that felf-prefervation was the first law of nature; that his connections with the unhappy lunatic were but flight; and that it could not be reafonably expected that he would run fuch rifks for his fervice, as were declined by one who had fet out with him from England on the footing of a companion. This infinuation introduced a difpute upon the nature of benevolence, and the moral fenfe, which (the republican argued) existed independent of any private confideration, and could never be affected by any contingent circumstance of time and fortune; while the other, who abhorred his principles, afferted the duties and excellence of private friendship, with infinite rancour of altercation.

During the hotteft of the argument, they were joined by the Capuchin, who, being aftonifhed to fee them thus virulently engaged at the door, and to hear the painter bellowing within the chamber, conjured them in the name of God, to tell him the caufe of that confusion, which had kept the whole house in continual alarm during the best part of the night, and feemed to be the immediate work of the devil and his angels. When the governor gave him to understand, that Pallet was visited with an evil spirit, he muttered a prayer of St. Antonio de Padua, and undertook to cure the painter, provided he could be fecured fo as that he might, without danger to himself, burn part of a certain relic under his nofe, which he affured them was equal to the miraculous power of Eleazar's ring. They expressed great curiofity to know what this treafure was; and the prieft was prevailed upon to tell them in confidence, that it was a collection of the parings of the nails belonging to those two madmen whom Jefus purged of the legion of devils that afterwards entered the fwine. So faying, he pulled from one of his pockets a fmall box, containing about an ounce of the parings of an horfe's hoof; at fight of which, the governor could not help fmiling, on account of the groffnels of the impolition. The doctor alked, with a fupercilious fmile, whether those maniacs, whom Jesus cured, were of the forrel complexion, or dapple gray; for, from the texture of these parings, he could prove, that the original owners were of the quadruped order, and even diftinguith, that their feet had been fortified with shoes of iron.

The mendicant, who bore an inveterate grudge against this fon of Æsculapius, ever fince he had made fo free with the Catholic religion, replied, with great bitterness, that he was a wretch, with whom no Christian ought to communicate; that the vengeance of Heaven would one day overtake him, on account of his profanity; and that his heart was shod with a metal much harder than iron, which nothing but hell-fire would be able to melt.

It was now broad day, and all the fervants of the inn were a-foot. Peregrine, feeing it would be impoffible to obtain any fort of indemnification for the time he had loft, and the perturbation of his fpirits hindering him from enjoying repose, which was, moreover, obstructed by the noife of Pallet and his attendants, put on his clothes at once, and, in exceeding ill humour, arrived at the fpot where this triumvirate flood debating about the means of overpowering the furious painter, who still continued his fong of oaths and execrations, and made fundry efforts to break open the door. Chagrined as our hero was, he could not help laughing when he heard how the patient had been treated; and his indignation changing into compassion, he called to him through the Xij key-hole, defiring to know the reafon of his diffracted behaviour. Pallet no fooner recognifed his voice, than lowering his own to a whimpering tone, " My dear friend (faid he), I have at last detected the ruffians who have perfecuted me fo much. I caught them in the fact of fuffocating me with cold water; and by the Lord I will be revenged, or may I never live to finish my Cleopatra. For the love of God open the door, and I will make that conceited Pagan, that pretender to tafte, that falle devotee of the ancients, who poilons people with fillykickabies and devil's dung; I fay, I will make him a monument of my wrath, and an example to all the cheats and impostors of the faculty; and as for that thick-headed infolent pedant, his confederate, who emptied my own jordan upon me while I flept, he had better been in his beloved Paris, botching fchemes for his friend the Pretender, than incur the effects of my refentment, Gadfbodikins! I won't leave him a wind-pipe for the hangman to ftop, at the end of another rebellion."

Pickle told him his conduct had been fo extravagant, as to confirm the whole company in the belief that he was actually deprived of his fenfes; on which fuppofition Mr. Jolter and the doctor had acted the part of friends, in doing that which they thought most conducive to his recovery; fo that their concern merited his thankful acknowledgment, instead of his frantic menaces: That, for his own part, he would be the first to condemn him, as one utterly bereft of his wits, and give orders for his being fecured as a madman, unlefs he would immediately give a proof of his fanity, by laying aside his fword, composing his spirits, and thanking his injured friends for their care of his perfon.

This alternative quieted his transports in a moment; he was terrified at the apprehension of being treated like a bedlamite, being dubious of the state of his own brain; and, on the other hand, had conceived such a horror and antipathy for his tormentors, that, far from believing himself obliged by what they had done, he could not even think of them without the utmost rage and detestation. He, therefore, in the most tranquil voice he could assume, protested, that he never was less out of his senses than at prefent, though he did not know how long he might retain them, if he fhould be confidered in the light of a lunatic: That, in order to prove his being composes mentis, he was willing to facrifice the refertment he for juftly harboured against those, who, by their malice, had brought him to this pass: But as he apprehended it would be the greatest fign of madness he could exhibit, to thank them for the mischiefs they had brought upon him, he defired to be excused from making any such concession; and swore he would endure every thing, rather than be guilty of such mean absurdity.

Peregrine held a confultation upon this reply, when the governor and phyfician ftrenuoufly argued against any capitulation with a maniac, and propofed that fome method might be taken to feize, fetter, and convey him into a dark room, where he might be treated according to the rules of art. But the Capuchin, understanding the circumftances of the cafe, undertook to reftore him to his former state, without having any recourse to fuch violent measures. Pickle, who was a better judge of the affair than any perfon prefent, opened the door without further hefitation, and difplayed the poor painter flanding with a woeful countenance, fhivering in his fhirt, which was as wet as if he had been dragged through the Dender : A fpectacle which gave fuch offence to the chafte eyes of the Hebrew's miltrefs, who was by this time one of the fpectators, that fhe turned her head another way, and withdrew to her own room, exclaiming against the indecent practices of men.

Pallet, feeing the young gentleman enter, ran to him, and, fhaking him by the hand, called him his beft friend, and faid he had refcued him from thofe who had a defign againft his life. The prieft would have produced his parings, and applied them to his nofe, but was hindered by Pickle, who advifed the patient to fhift himfelf, and put on his clothes. This being done with great order and deliberation, Mr. Jolter, who, with the doctor, had kept a wary diftance, in expectation of feeing fome ftrange effects of his diftraction, began to believe that he had been guilty of a miftake, and accufed the phyfician of having mifled him by his falfe diagnoftic. The doctor ftill infifted upon his former declaration, affuring him, that although Pallet enjoyed a fhort interval for the prefent, the delirium would foon recur, unlefs they would profit by this momentary calm, and ordered him to be blooded, bliftered, and purged, with all imaginable defpatch.

The governor, however, notwithstanding this caution, advanced to the injured party, and begged pardon for the fhare he had in giving him fuch difturbance. He declared, in the most folemn manner, that he had no other intention than that of contributing towards his welfare, and that his behaviour was the refult of the physician's prefcription, which he affirmed was absolutely necessfary for the recovery of his health.

The painter, who had very little gall in his difpofition, was fatisfied with this apology; but his refentment, which was before divided, now glowed with double fire against his first fellow-traveller, whom he looked upon as the author of all the mischances he had undergone, and marked out for his vengeance accordingly. Yet the doors of reconciliation were not fhut against the doctor, who, with great justice, might have transferred this load of offence from himfelf to Peregrine, who was, without doubt, the fource of the painter's misfortune : But, in that cafe, he must have owned himfelf miltaken in his medical capacity; and he did not think the friendship of Pallet important enough to be retrieved by fuch condefcenfion; fo that he refolved to neglect him entirely, and gradually forget the former correspondence he had maintained with a perfon whom he deemed fo unworthy of his notice.

CHAPTER LVIII.

Peregrine, almost distracted with his disappointments, conjures the fair Fleming to permit his visits at Brussels. She withdraws from his purfuit.

THINGS being thus adjusted, and all the company dreffed, they went to breakfast about five in the morning; and in lefs than an hour after were feated in the diligence, where a profound filence prevailed. Peregrine, who used to be the life of the fociety, was extremely penfive and melancholy on account of his mishap, the Israelite and his Dulcinea dejected in confequence of their difgrace, the poet abforpt in lofty meditation, the painter in fchemes of revenge, while Jolter, rocked by the motion of the carriage, made himfelf amends for the want of reft he had fuftained, and the mendicant, with his fair charge, were infected by the cloudy afpect of our youth, in whofe difappointment each of them, for different reafons, bore no inconfiderable fhare. This general languor and recefs from all bodily exercife, difpofed them all to receive the gentle yoke of flumber; and, in half an hour after they had embarked, there was not one of them awake, except our hero and his miftrefs, unlefs the Capuchin was pleafed to counterfeit fleep, in order to indulge our young gentleman with an opportunity of enjoying fome private converfation with his beauteous ward.

Peregrine did not neglect the occasion; but, on the contrary, feized the first minute, and, in gentle murmurs, lamented his hard hap in being thus the sport of fortune. He assure that and that with great sincerity), that all the cross accidents of his life had not cost him one half of the vexation and keenness of chagrin which he had suffered last night; and that, now he was on the brink of parting from her, he should be overwhelmed with the blackess despair, if she would not extend her compassion fo far as to give him an opportunity of fighing at her feet in Bruffels, during the few days his affairs would permit him to spend in that city.

This young lady, with an air of mortification, expreffed her forrow for being the innocent caufe of his anxiety; faid, fhe hoped laft night's adventure would be a falutary warning to both their fouls; for fhe was perfuaded that her virtue was protected by the intervention of Heaven; that, whatever imprefilion it might have made upon him, fhe was enabled by it to adhere to that duty from which her paffion had begun to fwerve; and, befeeching him to forget her for his own peace, gave him to underftand, that neither the plan fhe had laid down for her own conduct, nor the dictates of her honour, would allow her to receive his vifits, or carry on any other correspondence with him, while fhe was reftricted by the articles of her marriage vow.

This explanation produced fuch a violent effect upon her admirer, that he was for fome minutes deprived of the faculty of fpeech; which he no fooner recovered, than he gave vent to the most unbridled transports of paffion. He taxed her with barbarity and indifference ; told her, that fhe had robbed him of his reason and internal peace; that he would follow her to the ends of the earth, and ceafe to live fooner than ceafe to love her; that he would facrifice the innocent fool who had been the occafion of all this difquiet, and murder every man whom he confidered as an obstruction to his views. In a word, his passions, which had continued fo long in a state of the highest fermentation, together with the want of that repofe which calms and quiets the perturbation of the fpirits, had wrought him up to a pitch of real distraction. While he uttered thefe delirious expressions, the tears ran down his cheeks; and he underwent fuch agitation, that the tender heart of the fair Fleming was affected with his condition; and, while her own face was bedewed with the fireams of fympathy, the begged him, for Heaven's fake, to be composed; and promised, for his fatisfaction, to abate fomewhat of the rigour of her purpole. Confoled by this kind declaration, he recollected himfelf ; and, taking out his pencil, gave her his addrefs, when fhe had assured him that he should hear from her in four and twenty hours at fartheft after their feparation.

Thus foothed, he regained the empire of himfelf, and, by degrees, recovered his ferenity. But this was not the cafe with his Amanda, who, from this fample of his difpolition, dreaded the impetuolity of his youth, and was effectually deterred from entering into any engagements that might fubject her peace and reputation to the rafh effects of fuch a violent fpirit. Though the was captivated by his perfon and accomplifhments, fhe had reflection enough to forefee, that the longer fhe countenanced his paffion, her own heart would be more and more irretrievably engaged, and the quiet of her life the more exposed to continual interruption. She therefore profited by these confiderations, and a fense of religious honour, which helped her to withftand the fuggestions of inclination, and refolved to amule her lover with falle hopes, until fhe should have it in her power to relinquish his converfation, without running any rifk of fuffering by the inconfiderate fallies of his love. It was with this view that fhe defired he would not infift upon attending her to her mother's houfe, when the diligence arrived at Bruffels; and he, cajoled by her artifice, took a formal leave of her, together with the other ftrangers, fixing his habitation at the inn to which he and his fellow-travellers had been directed, in the impatient expectation of receiving a kind fummons from her within the limited time.

Meanwhile, in order to divert his imagination, he went to fee the ftadthoufe, park, and arfenal, took a fuperficial view of the bookfeller's cabinet of curiofities, and fpent the evening at the Italian opera, which was at that time exhibited for the entertainment of Prince Charles of Lorrain, then Governor of the Low Countries. In fhort, the ftated period was almost elapfed, when Peregrine received a letter to this purpofe :--

" SIR,

" IF you knew what violence I do my own heart, in declaring that I have withdrawn myfelf for ever from your addreffes, you would furely applaud the facrifice I make to virtue, and ftrive to imitate this example of felf-Yes, Sir, Heaven hath lent me grace to ftruggle denial. with my guilty paffion, and henceforth to avoid the dangerous fight of him who infpired it. I therefore conjure you, by the regard you ought to have for the eternal welfare of us both, as well as by the efteem and affection you profefs, to war with your unruly inclination, and defift from all attempts of frustrating the laudable refolution I have made. Seek not to invade the peace of one who loves you, to difturb the quiet of a family that never did you wrong, and to alienate the thoughts of a weak woman from a deferving man, who, by the most facred claim, ought to have the full poffession of her heart."

This billet, without either date or fubfcription, banifhed all remains of differentiation from the mind of our hero, who ran inftantly to the landlord, in all the ecftafy of madnefs, and demanded to fee the meffenger who brought the letter, on pain of putting his whole family to the fword. The innkeeper, terrified by his looks and menaces, fell upon his knees, protefting, in the face of Heaven, that he was utterly ignorant and innocent of any thing that could give him offence, and that the billet was brought by a perfon whom he did not know, and who retired immediately, faying it required no answer. He then gave utterance to his fury in a thoufand imprecations and invectives against the writer, whom he dishonoured with the appellations of a coquette, a jilt, an adventurer, who, by means of a pimping prieft, had defrauded him of his money. He denounced vengeance against the mendicant, whom he fwore he would destroy, if ever he fet eyes on him again. The painter unluckily appearing during this paroxyfm of rage, he feized him by the throat, faying, he was ruined by his accurfed folly; and, in all likelihood, poor Pallet would have been ftrangled, had not Jolter interpofed in his behalf, befeeching his pupil to have mercy upon the fufferer, and, with infinite anxiety, defiring to know the caufe of this violent af-He received no answer but a string of incoherent fault. curfes. When the painter, with unfpeakable aftonifhment, took God to witnefs that he had done nothing to difoblige him, the governor began to think, in fad earnest, that Peregrine's vivacity had at length rifen to the tranfports of actual madnefs, and was himfelf almost distracted with this supposition. That he might the better judge what remedy ought to be applied, he used his whole influence, and practifed all his eloquence upon the youth, in order to learn the immediate caufe of his delirium. He employed the most pathetic entreaties, and even shed tears in the course of his supplication; fo that Pickle (the first violence of the hurricane being blown over) was ashamed of his own imprudence, and retired to his chamber, in order to recollect his diffipated thoughts. There he fhut himfelf up, and, for the fecond time, perufing the fatal epiftle, began to waver in his opinion of the author's character and intention. He fometimes confidered her as one of those nymphs who, under the mask of innocence and fimplicity, practife upon the hearts and purfes of unwary and unexperienced youths. This was the fuggeftion of his wrath, inflamed by difappointment; but, when he reflected upon the circumftances of her behaviour, and recalled her particular charms to his imagination, the feverity of his centure gave way, and his heart declared in favour of her funcerity. Yet even this confideration aggravated the fense of his loss, and he was in danger of relapfing into his former diffraction, when his paffion was a little becalmed by the hope of feeing her again, either by accident, or in the course of a diligent and minute inquiry, which he forthwith refolved to fet on foot. had reafon to believe, that her own heart would efpouse his caufe, in fpite of her virtue's determination, and did not defpair of meeting with the Capuchin, whole good offices he knew he could at any time command. Comforted with these reflections, the tempest of his foul fubfided. In lefs than two hours he joined his company, with an air of composure, and asked the painter's forgivenefs for the freedom he had taken-the caufe of which he promifed hereafter to explain. Pallet was glad of being reconciled on any terms to one whofe countenance fupported him in equilibrio with his antagonift the doctor; and Mr. Jolter was rejoiced beyond measure at his pupil's recovery.

CHAPTER LIX.

Peregrine meets with Mrs. Hornbeck, and is confoled for his lofs. His valet de chambre is embroiled with her duenna, whom, however, he finds means to appeafe.

EVERY thing having thus refumed its natural channel, they dined together in great tranquillity. In the afternoon, Peregrine, on pretence of flaying at home to write letters, while his companions were at the coffeehoufe, ordered a coach to be called, and, with his valet de chambre, who was the only perfon acquainted with the prefent flate of his thoughts, fet out for the Promenade, to which all the ladies of fashion refort in the evening during the fummer feason, in hopes of feeing his fugitive among the reft.

Having made a circuit round the walk, and narrowly obferved every female in the place, he perceived at fome diftance the livery of Hornbeck upon a lacquey that ftood at the back of a coach: upon which he ordered his man to reconnoitre the faid carriage, while he pulled up his glaffes, that he might not be difcovered, before he fhould have received fome intelligence, by which he might conduct himfelf on this unexpected occasion, that already began to interfere with the purpole of his coming thither, though it could not difpute his attention with the idea of his charming unknown.

His Mercury having made his obfervations, reported, that there was no body in the coach but Mrs. Hornbeck and an elderly woman, who had all the air of a duennaand that the fervant was not the fame footman who had attended them in France. Encouraged by this information, our hero ordered himfelf to be driven clofe up to that fide of their convenience on which his old miftrefs fat; and accofted her with the ufual falutation. This lady no fooner beheld her gallant, than her cheeks reddened with a double glow; and fhe exclaimed, " Dear brother, I am overjoyed to fee you ! Pray come into our coach." He took the hint immediately, and, complying with her requeft, embraced this new fitter with great affection.

Perceiving that her attendant was very much furprifed. and alarmed at this unexpected meeting, fhe, in order to banifli her fuspicion, and at the fame time give her lover his cue, told him, that his brother (meaning her hufband) was gone to the Spa for a few weeks, by the advice of phyficians, on account of his ill ftate of health; and that, from his last letter, she had the pleasure to tell him, he was in a fair way of doing well. The young gentleman expressed his fatisfaction at this piece of news; obferving, with an air of fraternal concern, that if his brother had not made too free with his conftitution, his friends in England would have had no occasion to repine at his absence and want of health, by which he was banished from his own country and connections. He then afked (with an affectation of furprife) why fhe had not accompanied her spoufe; and was given to understand, that his tenderness of affection would not fuffer him to expose her to the fatigues of the journey, which lay among rocks that were almost inacceffible.

The duenna's doubts being eafed by this preamble of conversation, he changed the fubject to the pleasures of the place; and among other fuch questions, inquired if the had as yet visited Versailles? This is a public-house, fituated upon the canal, at the diftance of about two miles from town, and accommodated with tolerable gardens for the entertainment of company. When the replied in the negative, he proposed to accompany her thither immediately; but the governante, who had hitherto fat filent, objected to this propofal; telling them, in broken English, that as the lady was under her care, fhe could not anfwer to Mr. Hornbeck for allowing her to visit fuch a fuspicious place. " As for that matter, Madam (faid the confident gallant), give yourfelf no trouble; the confequences shall be at my peril, and I will undertake to enfure you against my brother's refentment." So faying, he directed the coachman to the place, and ordered his own to follow, under the aufpices of his valet de chambre, while the old gentlewoman, over-ruled by his affurance, quietly fubmitted to his authority.

Being arrived at the place, he handed the ladies from the coach, and then for the first time, observed that the duenna was lame, a circumstance of which he did not fcruple to take the advantage; for they had fcarce alighted, and drank a glafs of wine, when he advifed his fifter to enjoy a walk in the garden : And although the attendant made fhift to keep them almost always in view, they enjoyed a detached conversation, in which Peregrine learned, that the true caufe of her being left behind at Bruffels, whilft her hufband proceeded to Spa, was his dread of the company and familiarities of that place, to which his jealoufy durst not expose her; and that she had lived three weeks in a convent at Lifle, from which fhe was delivered by his own free motion, becaufe indeed he could no longer exist without her company; and lastly, our lover understood, that her governante was a mere dragon, who had been recommended to him by a Spanish merchant whofe wife fhe attended to her dying-day : But fhe very much queftioned whether or not her fidelity was proof enough against money and strong waters. Peregrine affured her the experiment should be tried before parting; and they agreed to pass the night at Verfailles, provided his endeavours fhould fucceed.

Having exercifed themfelves in this manner, until the duenna's fpirits were pretty much exhausted, that she might be the better disposed to recruit them with a glass of liquor, they returned to their apartment, and the cordial was recommended and received in a bumper : But as it did not produce fuch a visible alteration as the fanguine hopes of Pickle had made him expect, and the old gentlewoman observed that it began to be late, and that the gates would be fhut in a little time, he filled up a parting glass, and pledged her in equal quantity. Her blood was too much chilled to be warmed even by this extraordinary dose, which made immediate innovation in the brain of our youth, who, in the gaiety of his imagination, overwhelmed this fhe Argus with fuch profusion of gallantry, that fhe was more intoxicated with his expressions than with the fpirits fhe had drank. When, in the courfe of toying, he dropped a purfe into her bofom, fhe feemed to forget how the night wore, and, with the approbation of her charge, affented to his propofal of having fomething for fupper.

This was a great point which our adventurer had gained; and yet he plainly perceived that the governante miftook his meaning, by giving herfelf credit for all the paffion he had profeffed. As this error could be rectified by no other means than those of plying her with the bottle, until her diftinguishing faculties should be overpowered, he promoted a quick circulation. She did him justice, without any manifest figns of inebriation, fo long, that his own eyes began to reel in the fockets; and he found, that, before his scheme could be accomplished, he should be effectually unfitted for all the purposes of love. He therefore had recourse to his valet de chambre, who underftood the hint as foon as it was given, and readily undertook to perform the part, of which his mafter had played the prelude. This affair being fettled to his fatisfaction, and the night at odds with morning, he took an opportunity of imparting to the ear of this aged Dulcinea a kind whifper, importing a promife of vifiting her, when his fifter fhould be retired to her own chamber, and an earneft defire of leaving her door unlocked.

This agreeable intimation being communicated, he conveyed a caution of the fame nature to Mrs. Hornbeck, as he led her to her apartment; and darknefs and filence no fooner prevailed in the houfe, than he and his trufty fquire fet out on their different voyages. Every thing would have fucceeded according to their with, had not the valet de chambre fuffered himfelf to fall afleep at the fide of his inamorata, and, in the agitation of a violent dream, exclaimed in a voice fo unlike that of her fuppofed adorer, that the diffinguithed the difference at once. Waking him with a pinch and a loud thrick, the threatened to profecute him for a rape, and reviled him with all the epithets her rage and difappointment could fuggeft.

The Frenchman, finding himfelf detected, behaved with great temper and addrefs: He begged fhe would compofe herfelf, on account of her own reputation, which was extremely dear to him; protefting, that he had a moft inviolable efteem for her perfon. His reprefentations had weight with the duenna, who, upon recollection, comprehended the whole affair, and thought it would be her intereft to bring matters to an accommodation. She therefore admitted the apologies of her bed-fellow, provided he would promife to atone by marriage for the injury fhe had fuftained; and in this particular, he fet her heart at eafe by repeated vows, which he uttered with furprifing volubility, though without any intention to perform the leaft title of their contents.

Peregrine, who had been alarmed by her exclamation, and run to the door with a view of interpoling, according to the emergency of the cafe, overhearing the affair thus compromifed, returned to his miltrefs, who was highly entertained with an account of what had paffed, forefeeing, that, for the future, fhe fhould be under no difficulty or reftriction from the feverity of her guard.

CHAPTER LX.

Hornbeck is informed of his wife's adventure with Peregrine, for whom he prepares a ftratagem which is rendered ineffectual by the information of Pipes. The hufband is ducked for his intention, and our hero apprehended by the patrol.

THERE was another perfon, however, ftill ungained; and that was no other than her footman, whole fecrecy our hero attempted to fecure in the morning by a handfome prefent, which he received with many profefiions of gratitude and devotion to his fervice; yet this complaifance was nothing but a cloak ufed to difguife the defign he harboured of making his mafter acquainted with the whole transaction. Indeed this lacquey had been hired, not only as a fpy upon his miftrefs, but alfo as a check on the conduct of the governante, with promife of ample reward, if ever he should difcover any finister or fufpicious practices in the course of her behaviour. As for the footman whom they had brought from England, he was retained in attendance upon the perfon of his mafter, whose confidence he had loft, by advising him to gentle methods of reclaiming his lady, when her irregularities had subjected her to his wrath.

The Flemish valet, in confequence of the office he had undertaken, wrote to Hornbeck by the first post, giving an exact detail of the adventure at Versailles, with fuch a description of the pretended brother, as left the hufband no room to think he could be any other person than his first dishonourer; and exasperated him to such a degree, that he resolved to lay an ambush for this invader, and at once disqualify him from disturbing his repose, by maintaining further correspondence with his wife.

Meanwhile the lovers enjoyed themfelves without refiraint, and Peregrine's plan of inquiry after his dear unknown was for the prefent postponed. His fellow-travellers were confounded at his mysterious motions, which filled the heart of Jolter with anxiety and terror. This careful conductor was fraught with fuch experience of his pupil's difpolition, that he trembled with the apprehenfion of fome fudden accident, and lived in continual alarm, like a man that walks under the wall of a nodding Nor did he enjoy any alleviations of his fears, tower. when, upon telling the young gentleman, that the reft of the company were defirous of departing for Antwerp, he answered, that they were at liberty to confult their own inclinations; but, for his own part, he was refolved to ftay in Bruffels a few days longer. By this declaration the governor was confirmed in the opinion of his having fome intrigue upon the anvil. In the bitternefs of his veration, he took the liberty of fignifying his fufpicion, and reminding him of the dangerous dilemmas to which he had been reduced by his former precipitation.

Peregrine took his caution in good part, and promifed to behave with fuch circumfpection as would fcreen him from any troublesome confequences for the future; but, neverthelefs; behaved that fame evening in fuch a manner, as plainly fhowed, that his prudence was nothing elfe than vain speculation. He had made an appointment to fpend the night, as ufual, with Mrs. Hornbeck; and, about nine o'clock, haftened to her lodgings, when he was accosted in the street by his old discarded friend Thomas Pipes, who, without any other preamble, told him, that, for all he had turned him adrift, he did not choose to fee him run full fail into his enemy's harbour, without giving him timely notice of the danger. " I'll tell you what (faid he), mayhap you think I want to curry favour, that I may be taken in tow again ; if you do, you have made a miftake in your reckoning. I am old enough to be laid up, and have wherewithal to keep my planks from the weather. But this here is the affair; I have known you fince you were no higher than a marlinfpike, and fhould'nt care to fee you deprived of your rigging at thefe years : Whereby, I am informed by Hornbeck's man, whom I this afternoon fell in with by chance, as how his mafter has got intelligence of your boarding his wife, and has fteered privately into this port, with a large complement of hands, in order, d'ye fee, to fecure you while you are under the hatches. Now, if fo be as how you have a mind to give him a falt eel for his fupper, here am I, without hope of fee or reward, ready to ftand by you as long as my timbers will flick together; and if I expect any recompense, may I be bound to eat oakum and drink bilgewater for life."

Startled at this information, Peregrine examined him upon the particulars of his difcourfe with the lacquey; and when he underftood that Hornbeck's intelligence flowed from the canal of his Flemish footman, he believed every circumstance of Tom's report, thanked him for this warning, and, after having reprimanded him for his missenance they flow that it flow the him of the own fault if ever they should part again. He then deliberated with himfelf whether or not he should retort the Vol. 11. Y purpole upon his adverfary; but when he confidered that Hornbeck was not the aggrefior, and made that unhappy hufband's cafe his own, he could not help acquitting his intention of revenge, though, in his opinion, it ought to have been executed in a more honourable manner; and therefore he determined to chaftife him for his want of fpirit. Nothing furely can be more infolent and unjuft than this determination, which induced him to punifh a perfon for his want of courage to redrefs the injury which he himfelf had done to his reputation and peace; and yet this barbarity of decifion is authorifed by the opinion and practice of mankind.

With thefe fentiments he returned to the inn, and, putting a pair of piftols in his pocket, ordered his valet de chambre and Pipes to follow him at a fmall diftance, fo as that they fhould be within call in cafe of neceffity, and then posted himself within thirty yards of his Dulcinea's door. There he had not been above half an hour. when he perceived four men take their flation on the other fide, with a view, as he gueffed, to watch for his going in, that he might be taken unaware. But when they had tarried a confiderable time in that corner, without reaping the fruits of their expectation, their leader, perfuaded that the gallant had gained admittance by fome fecret means, approached the door with his followers, who, according to the inftructions they had received, no fooner faw it opened than they rushed in, leaving their employer in the ftreet, where he thought his perfon would be leaft endangered. Our adventurer, feeing him all alone, advanced with fpeed, and clapping a piftol to his breaft, commanded him to follow his footfteps, without noife, on pain of immediate death.

Terrified at this fudden apparition, Hornbeck obeyed in filence; and, in a few minutes, they arrived at the quay, where Pickle halting, gave him to underftand that he was no ftranger to his villanous defign—told him, that if he conceived himfelf injured by any circumftance of his conduct, he would now give him an opportunity of refenting the wrong, in a manner becoming a man of honour. "You have a fword about you (faid he), or, if you don't choofe to put the affair on that iffue, here is a brace of piftols, take which you pleafe." Such an addrefs could not fail to difconcert a man of his character. After fome hefitation, he, in a faultering accent, denied, that his defign was to mutilate Mr. Pickle, but that he thought himfelf entitled to the benefit of the law, by which he would have obtained a divorce, if he could have procured evidence of his wife's infidelity; and, with that view, he had employed people to take advantage of the information he had received. With regard to this alternative, he declined it entirely, becaufe he could not fee what fatisfaction he fhould enjoy, in being fhot through the head, or run through the lungs, by a perfon who had already wronged him in an irreparable manner. Laftly, his fear made him propofe, that the affair fhould be left to the arbitration of two creditable men, altogether unconcerned in the difpute.

To thefe remonstrances, Peregrine replied, in the ftyle of a hot-headed young man, confcious of his own unjuftifiable behaviour, that every gentleman ought to be a judge of his own honour, and therefore he would fubmit to the decifion of no umpire whatfoever; that he would forgive his want of courage, which might be a natural infirmity, but his mean diffimulation he could not pardon: That, as he was certified of the rafcally intent of his ambufcade, by undoubted intelligence, he would treat him, not with a retaliation of his own treachery, but with fuch indignity as a fcoundrel deferves to fuffer, unlefs he would make one effort to maintain the character he affumed in life. So faying, he again prefented his piftols, which being rejected as before, he called his two miniiters, and ordered them to duck him in the canal.

This command was pronounced and executed almost in the fame breath, to the unfpeakable terror and diforder of the poor fhivering patient, who, having undergone the immerfion, ran about like a drowned rat, fqueaking for affiftance and revenge. His cries were overheard by the patrole, who, chancing to pafs that way, took him under their protection, and, in confequence of his complaint and information, went in purfuit of our adventurer and his attendants, who were foon overtaken and furrounded. Rafh and inconfiderate as the young gentleman was, he did not pretend to ftand upon the defensive against a file of musketeers, although Pipes had drawn his cutlass at their approach, but furrendered himfelf without oppofition, and was conveyed to the main guard, where the commanding officer, engaged by his appearance and addrefs, treated him with all imaginable refpect. Hearing the particulars of his adventure, he affured him that the prince would confider the whole as a tour de jeunesse, and order him to be releafed without delay.

Next morning, when this gentleman gave in his report, he made fuch a favourable representation of the prifoner, that our hero was on the point of being discharged, when Hornbeck preferred a complaint, acculing him of a purposed affaffination, and praying that such punishment should be inflicted upon him as his highness should think adequate to the nature of the crime. The prince, perplexed with this petition, in confequence of which he forefaw that he must disoblige a British subject, sent for the plaintiff, of whom he had fome knowledge, and in perfon exhorted him to drop the profecution, which would only ferve to propagate his own fhame. But Hornbeck was too much incenfed to liften to any propofal of that kind, and peremptorily demanded justice against the prifoner, whom he represented as an obscure adventurer, who had made repeated attempts upon his honour and his life. Prince Charles told him, that what he had advised was in the capacity of a friend; but, fince he in-fifted upon his acting as a magistrate, the affair should be examined, and determined according to the dictates of juffice and truth.

The petitioner being difmiffed with this promife, the defendant was, in his turn, brought before the judge, whofe prepofiethon in his favour was in a great measure weakened by what his antagonist had faid to the prejudice of his birth and reputation.

CHAPTER LXI.

Peregrine is releafed. Jolter confounded at his mysterious conduct. A contest happens between the poet and painter, who are reconciled by the mediation of their fellow-travellers.

a fharper and affaffin, begged that he might have the liberty of fending for fome vouchers, that would probably vindicate his character from the malicious afperfions of his adverfary. This permiffion being granted, he wrote a letter to his governor, defiring that he would bring to him the letters of recommendation which he had received from the Britifh ambaffador at Paris, and fuch other papers as he thought conducive to evince the importance of his fituation.

. The billet was given in charge to one of the fubaltern officers on duty, who carried it to the inn, and demanded to speak with Mr. Jolter. Pallet, who happened to be at the door when this meffenger arrived, and heard him inquire for the tutor, ran directly to that gentleman's apartment, and in manifest diforder told him that a huge fellow of a foldier, with a monstrous pair of whiskers, and a fur cap as big as a bushel, was asking for him at the door. The poor governor began to shake at this intimation, though he was not confcious of having committed any thing that could attract the attention of the state. When the officer appeared at his chamber door, his confusion increased to fuch a degree, that his perception feemed to vanish, and the subaltern repeated the purport of his errand three times, before he could comprehend his meaning, or venture to receive the letter which he prefented. At length he fummoned all his fortitude, and having perused the epiftle, his terror funk into anxiety. His ingenuous fear immediately suggested, that Peregrine was confined in a dungeon, for some outrage he had committed. He ran with great agitation to a trunk, and, taking out a bundle of papers, followed his conductor, being attended by the painter, to whom he had hinted his apprehension. When they passed through the guard, which was under arms, the hearts of both died within them; and when they came into the prefence, there was fuch an expression of awful horror on the countenance of Jolter, that the prince, obferving his difmay, was pleafed to encourage him with an affurance that he had nothing to fear. Thus comforted, he recollected himfelf fo well as to understand his pupil, when he defired him to produce the ambaffador's letters; fome of which being open, were immediately read by his highnefs, who was perfon-Y iij ally acquainted with the writer, and knew feveral of the noblemen to whom they were addreffed. Thefe recommendations were fo warm, and reprefented the young gentleman in fuch an advantageous light, that the prince, convinced of the injuftice his character had fuffered by the mifreprefentation of Hornbeck, took our hero by the hand, afked pardon for the doubts he had entertained of his honour, declared him from that moment at liberty, ordered his domeftics to be enlarged, and offered him his countenance and protection as long as he fhould remain in the Auftrian Netherlands. At the fame time, he cautioned him againft indiferetion in the courfe of his gallantries; and took his word and honour, that he fhould drop all meafures of refentment againft the perfon of Hornbeck during his refidence in that place.

The delinquent, thus honourably acquitted, thanked the prince in the most respectful manner, for his generofity and candour, and retired with his two friends, who were amazed and bewildered in their thoughts at what they had feen and heard, the whole adventure ftill remaining without the fphere of their comprehension, which was not at all enlarged by the unaccountable appearance of Pipes, who, with the valet de chambre, joined them at the caffle gate. Had Jolter been a man of a luxuriant imagination, his brain would undoubtedly have fuffered in the invefligation of his pupil's mysterious conduct, which he ftrove in vain to unravel; but his intellects were too folid to be affected by the mifcarriage of his invention; and as Peregrine did not think proper to make him acquainted with the caufe of his being apprehended, he contented himfelf with fuppoling that there was a lady in the cafe.

The painter, whofe imagination was of a more flinify texture, formed a thoufand chimerical conjectures, which he communicated to Pickle, in imperfect infinuations, hoping, by his anfwers and behaviour, to difcover the truth; but the youth, in order to tantalize him, eluded all his inquiries, with fuch appearance of induftry and art, as heightened his curiofity, while it difappointed his aim, and inflamed him to fuch a degree of impatience, that his wits began to be unfettled. Then Peregrine was fain to recompose his brain, by telling him in confidence, that he had been arrefted as a fpy. This fecret he found more intolerable than his former uncertainty : He ran from one apartment to another, like a goofe in the agonies of egg-laying, with intention of difburdening this important load; but, Jolter being engaged with his pupil, and all the people of the house ignorant of the only language he could fpeak, he was compelled, with infinite reluctance, to addrefs himfelf to the doctor, who was at that time thut up in his own chamber. Having knocked at the door to no purpofe, he peeped through the keyhole, and faw the phyfician fitting at a table, with a pen in one hand, and paper before him, his head reclined upon his other hand, and his eyes fixed upon the cieling, as if he had been entranced. Pallet, concluding that he was under the power of fome convultion, endeavoured to force the door open; and the noife of his efforts recalled the doctor from his reverie. This poetical republican, being fo difagreeably difturbed, ftarted up in a paffion, and, opening the door, no fooner perceived who had interrupted him, than he flung it in his face with great fury, and curfed him for his impertinent intrufion, which had deprived him of the most delightful vision that ever regaled the human fancy. He imagined (as he afterwards imparted to Peregrine), that, as he enjoyed himfelf in walking through the flowery plain that borders on Parnafius, he was met by a venerable fage, whom, by a certain divine vivacity that lightened from his eyes, he inftantly knew to be the immortal Pindar. He was immediately ftruck with reverence and awe, and proftrated himfelf before the apparition, which, taking him by the hand, lifted him gently from the ground, and, with words more fweet than the honey of the Hybla bees, told him, that, of all the moderns, he alone was vifited by that celeftial impulse by which he himself had been infpired, when he produced his most applauded odes. So faying, he led him up the facred hill, perfuaded him to drink a copious draught of the waters of the Hippocrene, and then prefented him to the harmonious Nine, who crowned his temples with a laurel wreath.

No wonder that he was enraged to find himfelf cut off from fuch fublime fociety. He raved in Greek against the invader, who was so big with his own purpose, that, un-X iiii mindful of the difgrace he had fuftained, and difregarding all the fymptoms of the phyfician's difpleafure, he applied his mouth to the door, in an eager tone, "Pil hold you any wager (faid he) that I guefs the true caufe of Mr. Pickle's imprifonment." To this challenge he received no reply, and therefore repeated it, adding, "I fuppofe you imagine he was taken up for fighting a duel, or affronting a nobleman, or lying with fome man's wife, or fome fuch matter; but, egad ! you was never more miltaken in your life; and I'll lay my Cleopatra againft your Homer's head, that in four-and-twenty hours you fhan't light on the true reafon."

The favourite of the mufes, exafperated at this vexatious perfeverance of the painter, who he imagined had come to teafe and infult him, "I would (faid he) factifice a cock to Æsculapius, were I assured that any person had been taken up for extirpating fuch a troublefome Goth as you are from the face of the earth. As for your boafted Cleopatra, which you fay was drawn from your own wife, I believe the copy has as much of the to kalon as the original; but, were it mine, it should be hung up in the temple of Cloacina, as the picture of that goddefs; for any other apartment would be difgraced by its appearance." "Hark ye, Sir (replied Pallet, enraged in his turn at the contemptuous mention of his darling performance), you may make as free with my wife as you think proper, but 'ware my works; those are the children of my fancy, conceived by the glowing imagination, and formed by the art of my own hands; and you yourfelf are a Goth, and a Turk, and a Tartar, and an impudent pretending jackanapes, to treat with fuch difrespect a production which, in the opinion of all the connoiffeurs of the age, will, when finished, be a masterpiece in its kind, and do honour to human genius and fkill. So I fay again and again (and I care not though your friend Playtor heard me), that you have no more tafte than a drayman's horfe, and that those foolish notions of the ancients ought to be drubbed out of you with a good cudgel, that you might learn to treat men of parts with more veneration. Perhaps you may not always be in the company of one who will hollow for affiftance when you are on the brink of being chastifed for your infolence, as I did, when you brought upon yourfelf the referitment of that Scot, who, by the Lard! would have paid you both fcot and lot, as Falftaff fays, if the French officer had not put him in arreft."

The phyfician, to this declamation, which was conveyed through the key-hole, anfwered, that he (the painter) was a fellow fo infinitely below his confideration, that his conficience upbraided him with no action of his life, except that of choofing fuch a wretch for his companion and fellow-traveller. That he had viewed his character through the medium of good-nature and compaffion, which had prompted him to give Pallet an opportunity of acquiring fome new ideas, under his immediate inftruction; but he had abufed his goodnefs and condefcenfion in fuch a flagrant manner, that he was now determined to difcard him entirely from his acquaintance; and defired him, for the prefent, to take himfelf away, on pain of being kicked for his prefumption.

Pallet was too much incenfed to be intimidated by this threat, which he retorted with great virulence, defying him to come forth, that it might appear which of them was beft fkilled in that pedeftrian exercife, which he immediately began to practife againft the door with fuch thundering application, as reached the ears of Pickle and his governor, who coming out into the paffage, and feeing him thus employed, alked if he had forgot the chamber-pots of Aloft, that he ventured to behave in fuch a manner as entitled him to a fecond prefcription of the fame nature ?

The doctor, underftanding that there was company at hand, opened the door in a twinkling; and, fpringing upon his antagonift like a tiger, a fierce contention would have enfued, to the infinite fatisfaction of our hero, had not Jolter, to the manifeft peril of his own perfon, interpofed, and, partly by force, and partly by exhortations, put a ftop to the engagement before it was fairly begun. After having demonstrated the indecency of fuch a vulgar rencounter, betwixt two fellow citizens, in a foreign land, he begged to know the caufe of their diffention, and offered his good offices towards an accommodation. Peregrine alfo, feeing the fray was finished, expressed himfelf to the fame purpose; and the painter, for obvious reasons, declining an explanation, his antagonist told the youth what a mortifying interruption he had fuffered by the impertinent intrusion of Pallet, and gave him a detail of the particulars of his vision, as above recited. The arbiter owned the provocation was not to be endured; and decreed, that the offender fhould make fome atonement for his transgreffion. Upon which the painter obferved, that, however he might have been difpoled to make acknowledgments, if the phyfician had fignified his . difpleafure like a gentleman, the complainant had now forfeited all claim to any fuch conceffions, by the vulgar manner in which he had reviled him and his productions; observing, that, if he (the painter) had been inclined to retort his flanderous infinuations, the republican's own works would have afforded ample fubject for his ridicule and cenfure.

After divers difputes and reprefentations, peace was at length concluded, on condition, that, for the future, the doctor fhould never mention Cleopatra, unlefs he could fay fomething in her praife; and that Pallet, in confideration of his having been the first aggrefior, should make a sketch of the physician's vision, to be engraved and prefixed-to the next edition of his odes.

CHAPTER LXII.

The travellers depart for Antwerp, at which place the painter gives a loofe to his enthufiafm.

OUR adventurer, baffled in all his efforts to retrieve his loft Amanda, yielded at length to the remonftrances of his governor and follow-travellers, who out of pure complaifance to him, had exceeded their intended ftay by fix days at leaft : and a couple of poft chaifes, with three riding horfes, being hired, they departed from Bruffels in the morning, dined at Mechlin, and arrived about eight in the evening at the venerable city of Antwerp. During this day's journey, Pallet was elevated to an uncommon flow of fpirits, with the profpect of feeing the birthplace of Rubens, for whom he profeffed an euthufiaftic admiration. He fwore, that the pleafure he felt was equalto that of a Muffulman, on the laft day of his pilgrimage to Mecca; and that he already confidered himfelf a native of Antwerp, being fo intimately acquainted with their fo justly boasted citizen, from whom, at certain junctures, he could not help believing himfelf derived, becaufe his own pencil adopted the manner of that great man with furprifing facility, and his face wanted nothing but a pair of whifkers and a beard to exhibit the exprets image of the Fleming's countenance. He told them he was fo proud of this refemblance, that, in order to render it more striking, he had, at one time of his life, refolved to keep his face facred from the razor; and in that purpofe had perfevered, notwithftanding the continual reprehenfions of Mrs. Pallet, who, being then with child, faid, his afpect was fo hideous, that fhe dreaded a mifcarriage every hour, until she threatened, in plain terms, to dispute the fanity of his intellects, and apply to the chancellor for a committee.

The doctor, on this occasion, observed, that a man who is not proof against the folicitations of a woman, can never expect to make a great figure in life; that painters and poets ought to cultivate no wives but the mufes; or, if they are, by the accidents of fortune, encumbered with families, they fhould carefully guard against that pernicious weaknefs, falfely honoured with the appellation of natural affection, and pay no manner of regard to the impertinent cuftoms of the world. " Granting that you had been, for a fhort time, deemed a lunatic (faid he), you might have acquitted yourfelf honourably of that imputation, by fome performance that would have raifed your character above all cenfure. Sophocles himfelf, that celebrated tragic poet, who, for the fweetnefs of his verfification, was ftyled melitta, or the bee, in his old age fuffered the fame accufation from his own children, who, feeing him neglect his family affairs, and devote himfelf entirely to poetry, carried him before the magistrate, as a man whofe intellects were fo much impaired by the infirmities of age, that he was no longer fit to manage his domeftic concerns; upon which the reverend bard produced his tragedy of Oedipus epi kolono, as a work he had just finished; which being perused, instead of being declared unfound of understanding, he was difmiffed with admiration and applaufe. I wifh your beard and whifkers had been fanctioned by the like authority; though I am afraid you would have been in the predicament of those disciples of a certain philosopher, who drank decoctions of cummin feeds, that their faces might adopt the paleness of their master's complexion, hoping, that, in being as wan, they would be as learned as their teacher." The painter, flung with this farcafm, replied, " or like thofe virtuofi, who, by repeating Greek, eating fillikickabv, and pretending to fee visions, think they equal the ancients in tafte and genius." The phyfician retorted, Pallet rejoined, and the altercation continued until they entered the gates of Antwerp, when the admirer of Rubens broke forth into a rapturous exclamation, which put an end to the difpute, and attracted the notice of the inhabitants, many of whom, by fhrugging up their fhoulders, and pointing to their forcheads, gave fhrewd indications that they believed him a poor gentleman difordered in his brain.

They had no fooner alighted at the inn, than this pfeudoenthuliaft proposed to visit the great church, in which he had been informed fome of his master's pieces were to be feen; and was remarkably chagrined, when he underftood that he could not be admitted till next day. He rose next morning by day-break, and disturbed his fellowtravellers in such a noisy and clamorous manner, that Peregrine determined to punish him with some new infliction; and, while he put on his clothes, actually formed the plan of promoting a duel between him and the doctor; in the management of which he promised himself ftore of entertainment, from the behaviour of both.

Being provided with one of those domeftics who are always in waiting to offer their fervices to ftrangers on their first arrival, they were conducted to the house of a gentleman who had an excellent collection of pictures; and, though the greatest part of them were painted by his favourite artist, Pallet condemned them all by the lump, because Pickle had told him beforehand, that there was not one performance of Rubens among the number.

The next place they vifited was what is called the Academy of Painting, furnished with a number of paltry pieces, in which our painter recognised the style of Peter Paul, with many expressions of admiration, on the same fort of previous intelligence.

From this repofitory, they went to the great church; and being led to the tomb of Rubens, the whimfical painter fell upon his knees, and worshipped with such appearance of devotion, that the attendant, fcandalized at his fuperstition, pulled him up, obferving, with great warmth, that the perfon buried in that place was no faint, but as great a finner as himfelf; and that, if he was fpiritually difposed, there was a chapel of the Bleffed Virgin, at the diftance of three yards on the right hand, to which he might retire. He thought it was incumbent upon him to manifest some extraordinary inspiration, while he refided on the fpot where Rubens was born; and therefore his whole behaviour was an affectation of rapture, expreffed in diffracted exclamations, convulfive starts, and uncouth gefticulations. In the midft of his frantic behaviour, he faw an old Capuchin, with a white beard, mount the pulpit, and hold forth to the congregation with fuch violence of emphasis and gesture, as captivated his fancy; and, bawling aloud, " Zounds ! what an excellent Paul preaching at Athens !" he pulled a pencil and a fmall memorandum-book from his pocket, and began to take a sketch of the orator, with great eagerness and agitation, faying, " Egad ! friend Raphael, we shall fee whether you or I have got the best knack at trumping up an apostle." This appearance of difrespect gave offence to the audience, who began to murmur against this heretic libertine; when one of the priefts belonging to the choir, in order to prevent any ill confequence from their difpleafure, came and told him in the French language, that fuch liberties were not permitted in their religion, and advised him to lay aside his implements, left the people should take umbrage at his defign, and be provoked to punish him as a profane scoffer at their worthip.

The painter, feeing himfelf addreffed by a friar, who, while he fpoke, bowed with great complaifance, imagined that he was a begging brother come to fupplicate his charity; and his attention being quite engroffed by the defign he was making, he patted the prieft's fhaven crown with his hand, faying, Oter tems, oter tems, and then refumed his pencil with great carneftnefs. The ecclefiaftic, perceiving that the ftranger did not comprehend his meaning, pulled him by the fleeve, and explained himfelf in the Latin tongue; upon which Pallet, provoked at his intrufion, curfed him aloud for an impudent beggarly fon of a whore, and, taking out a fhilling, flung it upon the pavement, with manifeft figns of indignation.

Some of the common people, enraged to fee their religion contemned, and their priefts infulted at the very altar, rofe from their feats, and furrounding the aftonifhed painter, one of the number fnatched his book from his hand, and tore it into a thoufand pieces. Frightened as he was, he could not help crying, "Fire and faggots ! all my favourite ideas are gone to wreck !" and was in danger of being very roughly handled by the crowd, had not Peregrine ftepped in, and affured them, that he was a poor unhappy gentleman, who laboured under a transport of the brain. Those who understood the French language communicated this information to the reft, fo that he efcaped without any other chaftifement than being obliged to retire. And as they could not fee the famous defcent from the crofs till after the fervice was finished, they were conducted by their domestic to the house of a painter, where they found a beggar ftanding for his picture, and the artift actually employed in reprefenting a huge loufe that crawled upon his fhoulder. Pallet was wonderfully pleafed with this circumstance, which he faid was altogether a new thought, and an excellent hint, of which he would make his advantage; and, in the courfe of his furvey of this Fleming's performances, perceiving a piece in which two flies were engaged upon the carcafs of a dog half devoured, he ran to his brother Brush, and swore he was worthy of being a fellow-citizen of the immortal Rubens. He then lamented, with many expressions of grief and refentment, that he had loft his common-place book, in which he had preferved a thoufand conceptions of the fame fort, formed by the accidental objects of his fenfes and imagination; and took an opportunity of telling his fellow-travellers, that in execution he had equalled, if not excelled, the two ancient painters who vied with each other in the reprefentation of a curtain and a bunch of grapes; for he had exhibited the image of a certain object fo like to nature, that the bare fight of it fet a whole hog-fty in an uproar.

When he had examined and applauded all the productions of this minute artift, they returned to the great church, and were entertained with the view of that celebrated masterpiece of Rubens, in which he has introduced the portraits of himfelf and his whole family. The doors that conceal this capital performance were no fooner unfolded, than our enthufiast, debarred the use of fpeech, by a previous covenant with his friend Pickle, lifted up his hands and eyes, and putting himfelf in the attitude of Hamlet, when his father's ghoft appears, adored in filent ecstafy and awe. He even made a merit of neceffity; and, when they had withdrawn from the place, protefted that his whole faculties were fwallowed up in love and admiration. He now professed himself more than ever enamoured of the Flemish school, raved in extravagant encomiums, and proposed that the whole company should pay homage to the memory of the divine Rubens, by repairing forthwith to the houfe in which he lived, and proftrating themfelves on the floor of his painting-room.

As there was nothing remarkable in the tenement, which had been rebuilt more than once fince the death of that great man, Peregrine excufed himfelf from complying with the propofal, on pretence of being fatigued with the circuit they had already performed. Jolter declined it for the fame reafon; and the queftion being put to the doctor, he refufed his company with an air of difdain. Pallet, piqued at his contemptuous manner, asked, if he would not go and fee the habitation of Pindoor, provided he was in the city where that poet lived ? and when the physician observed, that there was an infinite difference between them men-" That I'll allow (replied the painter), for the devil a poet ever lived in Greece or Troy, that was worthy to clean the pencils of our beloved Rubens." The physician could not, with any degree of temper and forbearance, hear this outrageous blafphemy, for which, he faid, Pallet's eyes ought to be picked out by owls; and the difpute arofe, as ufual, to fuch feurrilities of language, and indecency of behaviour, that paffengers began to take notice of their animofity, and Peregrine was obliged to interpole for his own credit.

CHAPTER LXII.

Peregrine artfully foments a quarrel between Pallet and the phyfician, who fight a duel on the ramparts.

THE painter betook himfelf to the houfe of the Flemish Raphael, and the rest of the company went back to their lodgings; where the young gentleman, taking the advantage of being alone with the physician, recapitulated all the affronts he had fustained from the painter's petulance, aggravating every circumstance of the difgrace, and advising him, in the capacity of a friend, to take care of his honour, which could not fail to fuffer in the opinion of the world, if he allowed himself to be infulted with impunity, by one fo much his inferior in every degree of confideration.

The phyfician affured him, that Pallet had hitherto efcaped chaftifement, by being deemed an object unworthy his refentment, and in confideration of the wretch's family, for which his compafion was interefted; but that repeated injuries would inflame the most benevolent difposition : And although he could find no precedent of duelling among the Greeks and Romans, whom he confidered as the patterns of demeanour, Pallet should no longer avail himfelf of his veneration for the ancients, but be punished for the very next offence he should commit.

Having thus fpirited up the doctor to a refolution from which he could not decently fwerve, our adventurer acted the incendiary with the other party alfo; giving him to underftand, that the phyfician treated his character with fuch contempt, and behaved to him with fuch infolence, as no gentleman ought to bear: That, for his own part, he was every day put out of countenance by their mutual animofity, which appeared in nothing but vulgar expreffions, more becoming fhoe-boys and oyfter-women than men of honour and education; and therefore he fhould be obliged, contrary to his inclination, to break off all correfpondence with them both, if they would not fall upon fome method to retrieve the dignity of their characters.

Thefe reprefentations would have had little effect upon the timidity of the painter, who was likewife too much of a Grecian to approve of fingle combat, in any other way than that of boxing, an exercife in which he was well fkilled, had they not been accompanied with an infinuation, that his antagonift was no Hector, and that he might humble him into any conceffion, without running the leaft perfonal rifk. Animated by this affurance, our fecond Rubens fet the trumpet of defiance to his mouth, fwore he valued not his life a rufh, when his honour was concerned, and entreated Mr. Pickle to be the bearer of a challenge, which he would inftantly commit to writing.

The mifchievous fomenter highly applauded this manifeftation of courage, by which he was at liberty to cultivate his friend/hip and fociety, but declined the office of carrying the billet, that his tendernefs of Pallet's reputation might not be mifinterpreted into an officious defire of promoting quarrels. At the fame time, he recommended Tom Pipes, not only as a very proper meffenger on this occafion, but alfo as a trufty fecond in the field. The magnanimous painter took his advice, and, retiring to his chamber, penn'd a challenge in thefe terms:

" SIR,

"WHEN I am heartily provoked, I fear not the devil himfelf; much lefs——I will not call you a pedantic coxcomb, nor an unmannerly fellow, becaufe thefe are the hippythets of the wulgar: But, remember, fuch as you are, I nyther love you nor fear you; but, on the contrary, expect fatisfaction for your audacious behaviour to me on divers occafions; and will, this evening, in the twilight, meet you on the ramparts with fword and piftol, where the Lord have mercy on the foul of one of us, for your body fhall find no favour with your incenfed defier, till death,

Vol. II.

This refolute defiance, after having been fubmitted to the perufal, and honoured with the approbation of our youth, was committed to the charge of Pipes, who, according to his orders, delivered it in the afternoon; and brought for answer, that the physician would attend him at the appointed time and place. The challenger was evidently difcomposed at the unexpected news of this acceptance, and ran about the house in great diforder, in queft of Peregrine, to beg his further advice and affiftance; but understanding that the youth was engaged in private with his adverfary, he began to fufpect fome collufion, and curfed himfelf for his folly and precipitation. He cycn entertained fome thoughts of retracting his invitation, and fubmitting to the triumph of his antagonift : But before he would floop to this opprobrious condefcenfion, he refolved to try another expedient, which might be the means of faving both his character and perfon. In this hope he vifited Mr. Jolter, and very gravely defired he would be fo good as to undertake the office of his fecond in a duel which he was to fight that evening with the physician.

The governor, inflcad of anfwering his expectation, in expreffing fear and concern, and breaking forth into exclamations of "Good God! gentlemen, what d'ye mean? You shall not murder one another while it is in my power to prevent your purpofe. I will go directly to the governor of the place, who fhall interpofe his authority." I fay, inftead of these and other friendly menaces of prevention, Jolter heard the propofal with the most phlegmatic tranquillity, and excufed himfelf from accepting the honour he intended for him, on account of his character and fituation, which would not permit him to be concerned in any fuch rencounters. Indeed this mortifying reception was owing to a previous hint from Peregrine, who, dreading fome fort of interruption from his governor, had made him acquainted with his defign, and affured him, that the affair fhould not be brought to any dangerous iffue.

Thus difappointed, the dejected challenger was overwhelmed with perplexity and difmay; and, in the terrors of death or mutilation, refolved to deprecate the wrath of his enemy, and conform to any fubmitlion he fhould propofe, when he was accidentally encountered by our adventurer, who, with demonstrations of infinite fatisfaction, told him in confidence, that his billet had thrown the doctor into an agony of confternation; that his acceptance of his challenge was a mere effort of defpair, calculated to confound the ferocity of the fender, and difpofe him to liften to terms of accommodation; that he had imparted the letter to him with fear and trembling, on pretence of engaging him as a fecoud, but, in reality, with a view of obtaining his good offices in promoting a reconciliation; " but, perceiving the fituation of his mind (added our hero), I thought it would be more for your honour to baffle his expectation, and therefore I readily undertook the talk of attending him to the field, in full affurance that he will there humble himfelf before you, even to proftration. In this fecurity, you may go and prepare your arms, and befpeak the affiftance of Pipes, who will 'fquire you in the field, while I keep myfelf up, that our correspondence may not be fuspected by the physician." Pallet's fpirits, that were funk to dejection, role at this encouragement to all the infolence of triumph; he again declared his contempt of danger, and his piftols being loaded and accommodated with new flints, by his trufty armour-bearer, he waited, without flinching, for the hour of battle.

On the first approach of twilight, fomebody knocked at his door, and Pipes having opened it at his defire, he heard the voice of his antagonist pronounce, " Tell Mr. Pallet, that I am going to the place of appointment." The painter was not a little furprifed at this anticipation, which fo ill agreed with the information he had received from Pickle; and his concern beginning to recur, he fortified himfelf with a large bumper of brandy, which, however, did not overcome the anxiety of his thoughts. Neverthelefs, he fet out on the expedition with his fecoud, betwixt whom and himfe'f the following dialogue paffed, in their way to the ramparts. " Mr. Pipes (faid the painter, with difordered accent), methinks the doctor was in a peftilent hurry with that meffage of his." " Ey, ey, (answered Tom), I do suppose he longs to be foul of you." " What! (replied the other), d'ye think he thirfts after my blood ?" " To be fure a does," (faid Pipes, thrufting a large quid of tobacco in his cheek with great deliberation). "If that be the cafe (cried Pallet, begin-Zij ning to fliake), he is no better than a cannibal, and no Chriftian ought to fight him on equal footing." Tom obferving his emotion, eyed him with a frown of indignation, faying, " You an't afraid, are you ?" " God forbid ! (replied the challenger, ftammering with fear), What fhould I be afraid of? The worft he can do is to take my life, and then he'll be answerable both to God and man for the murder : Don't you think he will ?" " I think no fuch matter (anfwered the fecond); if fo be as how he puts a brace of bullets through your bows, and kills you fairly, it is no more murder than if I was to bring down a noddy from the main top-fail-yard." By this time Pallet's teeth chattered with fuch violence, that he could fcarce pronounce this reply. " Mr. Thomas, you feem to make very light of a man's life; but I truft in the Almighty, I shall not be fo eafily brought down. Sure many a man has fought a duel without lofing his life. Do you imagine that I run fuch a hazard of falling by the hand of my adverfary ?" "You may or you may not (faid the unconcerned Pipes), just as it happens. What then ! Death is a debt that every man owes, according to the fong; and if you fet foot to foot, I think one of you must go to pot." "Foot to foot! (exclaimed the terrified painter), that's downright butchery; and I'll be damn'd before I fight any man on earth in fuch a barbarous way. What I d'ye take me to be a favage beaft ?" This declaration he made while they afcended the ramparts. His attendant perceiving the phyfician and his fecond at the diftance of an hundred paces before them, gave him notice of their appearance, and advifed him to make ready, and behave like a man. Pallet in vain endeavoured to conceal his panic, which difcovered itfelf in an universal trepidation of body, and the lamentable tone in which he answered this exhortation of Pipes, faying, " I do behave like a man; but you would have me act the part of a brute. Are they coming this way?" When Tom told him that they had faced about, and admonifhed him to advance, the nerves of his arm refuled their office, he could not hold out his piftol, and inftead of going forward, retreated with an infenfibility of motion; till Pipes, placing himfelf in the rear, fet his own back to that of his principal, and fwore he fhould not budge an inch farther in that direction.

While the valet thus tutored the painter, his mafter enjoyed the terrors of the phylician, which were more ridiculous than those of Pallet, because he was more intent upon difguifing them. His declaration to Pickle in the morning would not fuffer him to ftart any objections when he received the challenge; and finding that the young gentleman made no offer of mediating the affair, but rather congratulated him on the occasion, when he communicated the painter's billet, all his efforts confifted in oblique hints, and general reflections upon the abfurdity of duelling, which was first introduced among civilized nations by the barbarous Huns and Longobards. He likewife pretended to ridicule the ufe of fire-arms, which confounded all the diftinctions of fkill and addrefs, and deprived a combatant of the opportunity of fignalifing his perfonal prowefs.

Pickle affented to the juftnefs of his obfervations; but, at the fame time, reprefented the neceffity of complying with the cuftoms of this world (ridiculous as they were), on which a man's honour and reputation depend. So that, feeing no hopes of profiting by that artifice, the republican's agitation became more and more remarkable; and he propofed, in plain terms, that they fhould contend in armour, like the combatants of ancient days; for it was but reafonable that they fhould practife the manner of fighting, fince they adopted the difpolition of thofe iron times.

Nothing could have afforded more diversion to our hero than the fight of two fuch duelifts cafed in iron; and he wished that he had promoted the quarrel in Bruffels, where he could have hired the armour of Charles the Fifth, and the valiant Duke of Parma, for their accommodation; but as there was no possibility of furnishing them cap-a-pee at Antwerp, he perfuaded him to conform to the modern use of the fword, and meet the painter on his own terms; and suffecting that his fear would supply him with other excuses for declining the combat, he comforted him with fome distant infinuations, to the prejudice of his adversary's courage, which would, in all probability, evaporate before any mischief could happen.

Notwithstanding this encouragement, he could not fuppress the reluctance with which he went to the field, and caft many a willful look over his left fhoulder, to fee whether or not his adverfary was at his heels. When, by the advice of his fecond, he took poffeffion of the ground, and turned about with his face to the enemy, it was not fo dark, but that Peregrine could perceive the unufual palenefs of his countenance, and the fweat ftanding in large drops upon his forehead; nay, there was a manifeft diforder in his fpeech, when he regretted his want of the pila and parma, with which he would have made a rattling noife, to altonifh his foc, in fpringing forward, and finging the hymn to battle, in the manner of the ancients.

In the mean time, obferving the hefitation of his antagonift, who, far from advancing, feemed to recoil, and even struggle with his fecond, he gueffed the situation of the painter's thoughts; and, collecting all the manhood that he poffeffed, feized the opportunity of profiting by his enemy's confternation. Striking his fword and piftol together, he advanced in a fort of trot, raifing a loud howl, in which he repeated, in lieu of the Spartan fong, part of the strophe from one of Pindar's Pythia, beginning with ek theon gar makanai pafai Broteais arctais, Ec. This imitation of the Greeks had all the defired effect upon the painter, who feeing the phyfician running towards him like a fury, with a piftol in his right hand, which was extended, and hearing the dreadful yell he uttered, and the outlandifh words he pronounced, was feized with an univerfal palfy of his limbs. He would have dropped down upon the ground, had not Pipes fupported and encouraged him to fland upon his defence. The doctor, contrary to his expectation, finding that he had not flinched from the fpot, though he had new performed one half of his career, put in practice his laft effort, by firing his piftol, the noife of which no fooner reached the ears of the affrighted painter, than he recommended his foul to God, and roared for mercy with great vociferation.

The republican, overjoyed at this exclamation, commanded him to yield, and furrender his arms, on pain of immediate death; upon which he threw away his piftols and fword, in fpite of all the admonitions and even threats of his fecond, who left him to his fate, and went up to his mafter, ftopping his nofe with figns of loathing and abhorrence.

The victor, having won the [polia opima, granted him his life, on condition that he would on his knees fupplicate his pardon, acknowledge himfelf inferior to his conqueror in every virtue and qualification, and promife for the future to merit his favour by fubmiffion and refpect. These infolent terms were readily embraced by the unfortunate challenger, who fairly owned, that he was not at all calculated for the purpofes of war, and that henceforth he would contend with no weapon but his pencil. He begged, with great humility, that Mr. Pickle would not think the worfe of his morals for this defect of courage, which was a natural infirmity inherited from his father, and fuspend his opinion of his talents, until he fhould have an opportunity of contemplating the charms of his Cleopatra, which would be finished in less than three months.

Our hero observed, with an affected air of displeafure, that no man could be justly condemned for being fubject to the impreffions of fear; and therefore his cowardice might eafily be forgiven; but there was fomething fo prefumptuous, dishonest, and disingenuous, in arrogating a quality to which he knew he had not the fmalleft pretention, that he could not forget his mifbehaviour all at once, though he would condefcend to communicate with him as formerly, in hopes of feeing a reformation in his conduct. Pallet protefted, that there was no diffimulation in the cafe; for he was ignorant of his own weaknefs, until his refolution was put to the trial : He faithfully promifed to demean himfelf, during the remaining part of the tour, with that confcious modesty and penitence which became a perfon in his condition; and, for the prefent, implored the affiftance of Mr. Pipes, in difembarraffing him from the difagreeable confequence of his fear.

CHAPTER LXIV.

The doctor exults in his victory They fet out for Rotterdam, where they are entertained by two Dutch gentlemen in a yacht, which is overturned in the Maele, to the manifelt hazard of the painter's life. They fpend the evening with their entertainers, and next day vifit a cabinet of curiofities.

Tom was accordingly ordered to minifter to his occafions; and the conqueror, elated with his faces, which he in a great measure attributed to his manner of attack, and the hymn which he howled, told Peregrine, that he was now convinced of the truth of what Pindar fung in these words, offa de me pephileke Zeus atuzontai Boan Pieridon aionta; for he had no fooner begun to repeat the mellifluent ftrains of that divine poet, than the wretch his antagonist was confounded, and his nerves unstrung.

On their return to the inn, he expatiated on the prudence and tranquillity of his own behaviour, and atcribed the confternation of Pallet to the remembrance of fome crime that lay heavy upon his confcience; for, in his opinion, a man of virtue and common fenfe could not poffibly be afraid of death, which is not only the peaceful harbour that receives him fhattered on the tempeftuous fea of life, but alfo the eternal feal of his fame and glory, which it is no longer in his power to forfeit and forego. He lamented his fate, in being doomed to live in fuch degenerate days, when war is become a mercenary trade; and ardently wished, that the day would come, when he should have such an opportunity of fignalizing his courage in the caufe of liberty, as that of Marathon, where an handful of Athenians, fighting for their freedom, defeated the whole ftrength of the Perfian empire. "Would to heaven ! (faid he), my muse were bleffed with an occasion to emulate that glorious testimony on the trophy in Cyprus, crected by Cimon, for two great victories gained on the fame day over the Perfians by fea and land; in which it is very remarkable, that the greatnefs of the occasion has raifed the manner of expression above the ufual fimplicity and modefty of all other ancient infcriptions." He then repeated it with all the pomp of declamation, and fignified his hope, that the French would one day invade us with fuch an army as that which Xerxes led into Greece, that it might be in his power to devote himfelf, like Leonidas, to the freedom of his country.

This memorable combat being thus determined, and every thing that was remarkable in Antwerp furveyed, they fent their baggage down the Scheldt to Rotterdam, and fet out for the fame place in a poft waggon, which that fame evening brought them in fafety to the banks of the Maefe. They put up at an English house of entertainment, remarkable for the modefty and moderation of the landlord; and next morning the doctor went in perfon to deliver letters of recommendation to two Dutch gentlemen from one of his acquaintance at Paris. Neither of them happened to be at home when he called; fo that he left a meflage at their lodgings, with his addrefs; and in the afternoon they waited upon the company, and, after many hospitable professions, one of the two invited them to fpend the evening at his house.

Meanwhile they had provided a pleafure yacht, in which they proposed to treat them with an excursion upon the Maefe. This being almost the only diversion that place affords, our young gentleman relifhed the propofal; and, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Mr. Jolter, who declined the voyage on account of the roughness of the weather, they went on board without hefitation, and found a collation prepared in the cabin. While they tacked to and fro in the river, under the impulse of a mackerel breeze, the physician expressed his fatisfaction, and Pallet was ravified with the entertainment. But the wind increasing, to the unspeakable joy of the Dutchmen, who had now an opportunity of flowing their dexterity in the management of the vefiel, the guefts found it inconvenient to ftand upon deck, and impoffible to fit below, on account of the clouds of tobacco fmoke which rolled from the pipes of their entertainers, in fuch volumes as annoyed them even to the hazard of fuffocation. This fumigation, together with the extraordinary motion of the ship, began to affect the head and stomach of the painter, who begged earneftly to be fet on fhore : But the Dutch gentlemen, who had no idea of his fufferings, infifted, with furprifing obstinacy of regard, upon his staying until he should see an instance of the skill of their mariners; and, bringing him on deck, commanded the men to carry the vefiel's lee gun-wall under water. This nicety of navigation they inftantly performed, to the admiration of Pickle, the difcomposure of the doctor, and terror of Pallet, who bleffed himfelf from the courtefy of a Dutchman, and prayed to heaven for his deliverance.

While the Hollanders enjoyed the reputation of this feat, and the diftrefs of the painter at the fame time, the yacht was overtaken by a fudden fquall, that overfet her in a moment, and flung every man overboard into the Maefe, before they could have the leaft warning of their fate, much lefs time to provide against the accident. Peregrine, who was an expert fwimmer, reached the fhore in fafety; the phyfician, in the agonies of defpair, laid fast hold on the trunk-breeches of one of the men, who dragged him to the other fide; the entertainers landed at the bomb-keys, fmoking their pipes all the way with great deliberation; and the poor painter must have gone to the bottom, had not he been encountered by the cable of a fhip that lay at anchor near the fcene of their difafter. Though his fenfes had forfaken him, his hands fastened by inftinct on this providential occurrence, which he held with fuch a convulfive grafp, that, when a boat was fent out to bring him on fhore, it was with the utmost difficulty that his fingers were difengaged. He was carried into a house, deprived of the use of speech, and bereft of all fenfation; and, being fuspended by the heels, a vaft quantity of water ran out of his mouth. This evacuation being made, he began to utter dreadful groans, which gradually increafed to a continued roar; and, after he had regained the ufe of his fenfes, he underwent a delirium that lasted feveral hours. As for the treaters, they never dreamed of expressing the least concern to Pickle or the phyfician for what had happened, becaufe it was an accident fo common as to pais without notice.

Lcaving the care of the vefiel to the feamen, the company retired to their refpective lodgings, in order to thift their clothes; and in the evening our travellers were conducted to the houfe of their new friend, who, with a view of making his invitation the more agreeable, had affembled to the number of twenty or thirty Englishmen, of all ranks and degrees, from the merchant to the periwigmåker's 'prentice.

In the midft of this congregation ftood a chafing-difh with live coals, for the convenience of lighting their pipes, and every individual was accommodated with a fpittingbox. There was not a mouth in the apartment unfurnifhed with a tube, fo that they refembled a congregation of chimeras breathing fire and fmoke; and our gentlemen were fain to imitate their example in their own defence. It is not to be fuppofed that the conversation was either very fprightly or polite; the whole entertainment was of the Dutch caft, frowzy and phlegmatic; and our adventurer, as he returned to his lodging, tortured with the headach, and difgufted with every circumftance of his treatment, curfed the hour in which the doctor had faddled them with fuch troublefome companions.

Next morning by eight o'clock, thefe polite Hollanders returned the visit, and, after breakfast, attended their English friends to the house of a person that possessed a very curious cabinet of curiofities, to which they had fecured our company's admiffion. The owner of this collection was a cheefemonger, who received them in a woollen night-cap, with ftraps buttoned under his chin. As he underftood no language but his own, he told them, by the canal of one of their conductors, that he did not make a practice of fhowing his curiofities; but understanding that they were Englishmen, and recommended to his friends, he was content to fubmit them to their perufal. So faying, he led them up a dark ftair, into a fmall room, decorated with a few paltry figures in plaster of Paris, two or three miferable landfcapes, the tkins of an otter, feal, and fome fifnes ftuffed; and in one corner ftood a glafs-cafe, furnished with newts, frogs, lizards, and ferpents, preferved in fpirits; a human foetus, a calf with two heads, and about two dozen of butterflies pinned upon paper.

The virtuofo having exhibited thefe particulars, eyed the ftrangers with a look foliciting admiration and applaufe; and as he could not perceive any fymptom of either in their geftures or countenances, withdrew a curtain, and difplayed a wainfcot cheft of drawers, in which, he gave them to underftand, was fomething that would agreeably amuse the imagination. Our travellers, regaled with this notice, imagined that they would be entertained with the fight of fome curious medals, or other productions of antiquity; but how were they difappointed, when they faw nothing but a variety of fhells, difpofed in whimfical figures, in each drawer ! After he had detained them full two hours with a tedious commentary upon the fhape, fize, and colour of each department, he, with a fupercilious fimper, defired that the English gentlemen would frankly and candidly declare, whether his cabinet, or that of Mynheer Sloane at London, was the most valuable. When this requeft was fignified in English to the company, the painter inftantly exclaimed, " By the Lard ! they are not to be named of a day. And as for that matter, I would not give one corner of Saltero's coffeehoufe at Chelfea for all the trafh he hath fhown." Peregrine, unwilling to mortify any perfon who had done his endeavour to pleafe him, obferved, that what he had feen was very curious and entertaining; but that no private collection in Europe was equal to that of Sir Hans Sloane, which, exclusive of prefents, had coft an hundred thoufand pounds. The two conductors were confounded at this affeveration, which being communicated to the cheefemonger, he shook his head with a significant grin; and, though he did not choose to express his incredulity in words, gave our hero to understand, that he did not much depend upon his veracity.

From the house of this Dutch naturalist, they were dragged all round the city by the painful civility of their attendants, who did not quit them till the evening was well advanced, and then not till after they had promised to be with them before ten o'clock next day, in order to conduct them to a country house, fituated in a pleasant village on the other fide of the river.

Pickle was already fo much fatigued with their hofpitality, that, for the first time of his life, he fuffered a dejection of spirits; and refolved, at any rate, to avoid the threatened perfecution of to-morrow. With this view, he ordered his servants to pack up fome clothes and linen in a portmanteau; and in the morning embarked, with his governor, in the Treckssuyt, for the Hague, whither he pretended to be called by some urgent occasion, leaving his fellow-travellers to make his apology to their friends; and affuring them, that he would not proceed for Amfterdam without their fociety. He arrived at the Hague in the forenoon, and dined at an ordinary frequented by officers and people of fathion; where being informed that the princefs would fee company in the evening, he dreffed himfelf in a rich fuit of the Parifian cut, and went to court, without any introduction. A perfon of his appearance could not fail to attract the notice of fuch a fmall circle. The prince himfelf, underftanding he was an Englifhman and a ftranger, went up to him without ceremony, and, having welcomed him to the place, converfed with him for fome minutes on the common topics of difcourfe.

CHAPTER LXV.

They proceed to the Hague; from whence they depart for Amfterdam, where they fee a Dutch tragedy. Vifit the mulic-houfe, in which Peregrine quarrels with the captain of a man of war. They pafs through Haerlem, in their way to Leyden. Return to Rotterdam, where the company feparates, and our hero, with his attendants, arrive in fafety at Harwich.

BEING joined by their fellow-travellers in the morning, they made a tour to all the remarkable places in this celebrated village; faw the Foundery, the Stadthoufe, the Spinhuys, Vauxhall, and Count Bentincke's gardens, and in the evening went to the French comedy, which was directed by a noted Harlequin, who had found means to flatter the Dutch tafte fo effectually, that they extolled him as the greatest actor that ever appeared in the province of Holland. This famous company did not reprefent regular theatrical pieces, but only a fort of impromptus, in which this noted player always performed the greatest part of the entertainment. Among other fallies of wit that escaped him, there was one circumstance fo remarkably adapted to the disposition and genius of his audience, that it were pity to pass it over in filence. A windmill being exhibited on the scene, Harlequin, after having furveyed it with curiofity and admiration, afks one of the millers the use of that machine; and being told that it was a windmill, obferves, with fome concern, that as there was not the leaft breath of wind, he could not have the pleafure of feeing it turn round. Urged by this confideration, he puts himfelf into the attitude of a perfen wrapt in profound meditation; and having continued a few feeonds in this pofture, runs to the miller with great cagernefs and joy, and telling him that he had found an expedient to make his mill work, very fairly unbuttons his breeches: Then prefenting his pofteriors to the fails of the machine, certain explofions are immediately heard, and the arms of the mill begin to turn round, to the infinite fatisfaction of the fpectators, who approve the joke with loud peals of applaufe.

Our travellers staid a few days at the Hague, during which the young gentleman waited on the British ambaffador, to whom he was recommended by his excellency at Paris, and loft about thirty guineas at billiards to a French adventurer, who decoyed him into the fnare by keeping up his game. Then they departed in a poftwaggon for Amfterdam, being provided with letters of introduction to an English merchant reliding in that city, under whofe aufpices they vifited every thing worth feeing, and, among other excursions, went to fee a Dutch tragedy acted; an entertainment which, of all others, had the ftrangeft effect upon the organs of our hero; the drefs of their chief perfonages was fo antic, their manner fo awkwardly abfurd, and their language fo ridiculoufly unfit for conveying the fentiments of love and honour, that Peregrine's nerves were diuretically affected with the complicated abfurdity, and he was compelled to withdraw twenty times before the cataltrophe of the piece.

The fubject of this performance was the famous flory of Scipio's continence and virtue, in reftoring the fair captive to her lover. The young Roman hero was reprefented by a broad-faced Batavian, in a burgomafter's gown and a fur cap, fitting fmoking his pipe at a table furnifhed with a can of beer, a drinking glafs, and a plate of tobacco: The lady was fuch a perion as Scipio might very well be fuppofed to give away, without any great effort of generofity; and indeed the Celtiberian prince feemed to be of that opinion; for, upon receiving her from the hand of the victor, he difcovered none of thofe transports of gratitude and joy which Livy deferibes in recounting this event. The Dutch Scipio, however, was complaifant enough in his way; for he defired her to fit at his right hand, by the appellation of  $\Upsilon a$  frow, and with his own fingers filling a clean pipe, prefented it to Mynheer Allucio the lover. The reft of the economy of the piece was in the fame tafte; which was fo agreeable to the audience, that they feemed to have fhaken off their natural phlegm, in order to applaud the performance.

From the play our company adjourned to the houfe of their friend, where they fpent the evening; and the converfation turning upon poetry, a Dutchman who was prefent, and underftood the Englifh language, having liftened very attentively to the difcourfe, lifted up with both hands the greateft part of a Chefhire cheefe that lay upon the table, faying, "I do know vat is boeter. Mine brotre be a great boet, and ave vrought a book as dick as all dat." Pickle, diverted with this method of effimating an author according to the quantity of his works, inquired about the fubjects of this bard's writings; but of thefe his brother could give no account, or other information, but that there was little market for the commodity, which hung heavy upon his hands, and induced him to wifh he had applied himfelf to another trade.

The only remarkable fcene in Amfterdam, which our company had not feen, was the Spuyl or mufic-houfes, which, by the connivance of the magistrates, are- maintained for the recreation of those who might attempt the chaftity of creditable women, if they were not provided. with fuch conveniencies. To one of thefe night-houfes, did our travellers repair, under the conduct of the Englifh merchant, and were introduced into fuch another place as the ever memorable coffeehouse of Moll King; with this difference, that the company here were not fo riotous as the bucks of Covent Garden, but formed themfelves into a circle, within which fome of the number danced to the mulic of a fcurvy organ and a few other inftruments, that uttered tunes very fuitable to the difpolition of the hearers, while the whole apartment was fhrouded with clouds of fmoke impervious to the view. When our gentlemen entered, the floor was occupie I by two females and their gallants, who, in the performance of their exercife, lifted their legs like fo many oxen at plough; and the pipe of one of those hoppers happening to be exhaufted, in the midft of his farabrand he very deliberately drew forth his tobacco-box, filling and lighting it again, without any interruption to the dance. Peregrine being unchecked by the prefence of his governor, who was too tender of his own reputation to attend them in this expedition, made up to a fprightly French girl who fat in feeming expectation of a cuftomer, and prevailing upon her to be his partner, led her into the circle, and, in his turn, took the opportunity of dancing a minuet, to the admiration of all prefent. He intended to have exhibited another specimen of his ability in this art, when a captain of a Dutch man of war chancing to come in, and feeing a ftranger engaged with the lady whom, it feems, he had befpoke for his bedfellow, he advanced without any ceremony, and feizing her by the arm, pulled her to the other fide of the room. Our adventurer, who was not a man to put up with fuch a brutal affront, followed the ravifher with indignation in his eyes, and pufhing him on one fide, retook the fubject of their contest, and led her back to the place from whence the had been dragged. The Dutchman, enraged at the youth's prefumption, obeyed the first dictates of his choler, and lent his rival a hearty box on the ear; which was immediately repaid with interest, before our hero could recollect himfelf fufficiently to lay his hand upon his fword, and beckon the aggreffor to the door.

Notwithftanding the confution and diforder which this affair produced in the room, and the endeavours of Pickle's company, who interpoled, in order to prevent bloodfhed, the antagonifts reached the ftreet; and Peregrine drawing, was furprifed to fee the captain advance againft him with a long knife, which he preferred to the fword that hung by his fide. The youth, confounded at this prepotterous behaviour, defired him, in the French tongue, to lay afide that vulgar implement, and approach like a gentleman: But the Hollander, who neither underftood the propofal, nor would have complied with his demand, had he been made acquainted with his meaning, rufhed forward like a defperado, before his adverfary could put himfelf on his guard; and if the young gentleman had not been endued with furprifing agility, his nofe would have fallen a facrifice to the fury of the affailant. Finding himfelf in fuch imminent jeopardy, he leaped to one fide, and the Dutchman paffing him, in the force of his career, he with one nimble kick made fuch application to his enemy's heels, that he flew like lightning into the canal, where he had almost perifhed by pitching upon one of the posts with which it is faced.

Peregrine having performed this exploit, did not ftay for the captain's coming on fhore, but retreated with all defpatch, by the advice of his conductor; and next day embarked, with his companions, in the Skuyt for Haerlem, where they dined, and in the evening arrived at the ancient city of Leyden, where they met with fome English ftudents, who treated them with great hospitality. Not but that the harmony of the conversation was that fame night interrupted by a difpute that arofe between one of those young gentlemen and the physician, about the cold and hot methods of prefcription in the gout and rheumatifm; and proceeded to fuch a degree of mutual reviling, that Pickle, ashamed and incensed at his fellow-traveller's want of urbanity, espoused the other's cause, and openly rebuked him for his unmannerly petulance, which (he faid) rendered him unfit for the purposes, and unworthy of the benefit, of fociety. This unexpected declaration overwhelmed the doctor with amazement and confusion; he was inftantaneoufly deprived of his fpeech, and, during the remaining part of the party, fat in filent mortification. In all probability he deliberated with himfelf, whether or not he fhould expostulate with the young gentleman on the freedom he had taken with his character in a company of ftrangers; but as he knew he had not a Pallet to deal with, he very prudently suppressed that suggestion, and in fecret chewed the cud of refentment.

After they had visited the physic garden, the university, the anatomical hall, and every other thing that was recommended to their view, they returned to Rotterdam, and held a confultation upon the method of transporting themselves to England. The doctor, whose grudge against Peregrine was rather inflamed than allayed by our hero's indifference and neglect, had tampered with the simplicity of the painter, who was proud of his advances to Vol. 11. A a wards a perfect reconciliation; and now took the opportunity of parting with our adventurer, by declaring that he and his friend Mr. Pallet were refolved to take their paffage in a trading floop, after he had heard Peregrine object againft that tedious, difagreeable, and uncertain method of conveyance. Pickle immediately faw his intention; and, without ufing the leaft argument to diffuade them from their defigu, or expreffing the fmalleft degree of concern at their feparation, very coolly withed them a profperous voyage, and ordered his baggage to be fent to Helvoetfluys. There he himfelf and his retinue went on board of the packet next day, and, by the favour of a fair wind, in eighteen hours arrived at Harwich.

CHAPTER LXVI.

Now that our hero found himfelf on English ground, his heart dilated with the proud recollection of his own improvement fince he left his native foil. He began to recognife the interesting ideas of his tender years ; he enjoyed by anticipation the pleafure of feeing his friends in the garrifon, after an absence of eighteen months; and the image of his charming Emily, which other lefs worthy confiderations had depressed, refumed the full possession of his breaft. He remembered with fhame, that he had neglected the correspondence with her brother, which he himfelf had folicited, and in confequence of which he had received a letter from that young gentleman, while he lived at Paris. In fpite of thefe confcientious reflections, he was too felf-fufficient to think he fhould find any difficulty in obtaining forgiveness for fuch fins of omission; and began to imagine, that his paffion would be preju-dicial to the dignity of his fituation, if it could not be gratified upon terms which formerly his imagination durft not conceive.

Sorry I am, that the tafk I have undertaken, lays me under the neceffity of divulging this degeneracy in the Peregrine delivers his letters of recommendation at London, and returns to the garrifon, to the unfpeakable joy of the commodore and his whole family.

fentiments of our imperious youth, who was now in the heyday of his blood, flufhed with the confcioufnefs of his own qualifications, vain of his fortune, and elated on the wings of imaginary expectation. Though he was deeply enamoured of Mifs Gauntlet, he was far from propofing her heart as the ultimate aim of his gallantry, which (he did not doubt) would triumph over the most illustrious females of the land, and at once regale his appetite and ambition.

Meanwhile, being willing to make his appearance at the garrifon equally furprifing and agreeable, he cautioned Mr. Jolter against writing to the commodore, who had not heard of them fince their departure from Paris, and hired a post chaise and horses for London. The governor, going out to give orders about the carriage, inadvertently left a paper book open upon the table; and his pupil cafting his eyes upon the page, chanced to read thefe words : -" Sept. 15. Arrived in fafety, by the bleffing of God, in this unhappy kingdom of England. And thus concludes the journal of my laft peregrination." Peregrine's curiofity being inflamed by this extraordinary conclusion, he turned to the beginning, and perufed feveral fheets of a diary fuch as is commonly kept by that clafs of people known by the denomination of travelling governors, for the fatisfaction of themfelves and the parents or guardians of their pupils, and for the edification and entertainment of their friends.

That the reader may have a clear idea of Mr. Jolter's performance, we fhall transferibe the transfactions of one day, as he had recorded them; and that abstract will be a fufficient specimen of the whole plan and execution of the work.

"May 3. At eight o'clock fet out from Boulogne in a poft chaife—the morning hazy and cold. Fortified my ftomach with a cordial. Recommended ditto to Mr. P. as an antidote againft the fog. Mem. He refufed it. The hither horfe greafed in the off-paftern of the hind leg. Arrive at Samers. Mem. This laft was a poft and a half, i. e. three leagues, or nine Englith miles. The day clears up. A fine champaign country, well flored with corn. The poftillion fays his prayers in paffing by a wooden crucifix upon the road. Mem. The horfes ftaled in a fmall A a ij brook that runs in a bottom, betwixt two hills. Arrive at Cormont. A common post. A dispute with my pupil, who is obstinate, and fwayed by an unlucky prejudice. Proceed to Montreuil, where we dine on choice pigeons. A very moderate charge. No chamber-pot in the room, owing to the negligence of the maid. This is an ordinary post. Set out again for Nampont. Troubled with flatulencies and indigeftion. Mr. P. is fullen, and feems to miftake an eructation for the breaking of wind backwards. From Nampont depart for Bernay, at which place we arrive in the evening, and propose to stay all night. N. B. The two laft are double pofts, and our cattle very willing, though not ftrong. Sup on a delicate ragout and excellent partridges, in company with Mr. H. and his fpouse. Mem. The faid H. trod upon my corn by miftake. Difcharge the bill, which is not very reafonable. Difpute with Mr. P. about giving money to the fervant : He infifts upon my giving a twenty-four fols piece, which is too much by two-thirds, in all confcience. N. B. She was a pert baggage, and did not deferve a liard."

Our hero was fo much difobliged with certain circumftances of this amufing and inftructing journal, that, by way of punifhing the author, he interlined thefe words betwixt two paragraphs, in a manner that exactly refembled the tutor's hand-writing—" Mem. Had the pleafure of drinking myfelf into a fweet intoxication, by toafting our lawful king, and his royal family, among fome worthy Englifh fathers of the Society of Jefus."

Having taken this revenge, he fet out for London, where he waited upon those noblemen to whom he had letters of recommendation from Paris; and was not only graciously received, but even loaded with carefles and profers of fervice, because they understood he was a young gentleman of fortune, who, far from standing in need of their countenance or affistance, would make an useful and creditable addition to the number of their adherents. He had the honour of dining at their tables, in confequence of press invitations, and of spending several evenings with the ladies to whom he was particularly agreeable, on account of his person, address, and bleeding freely at play.

was high time to pay his refpects to his generous benefactor, the commodore; and accordingly departed one morning, with his train, for the garrifon, at which he arrived in fafety the fame night. When he entered the gate, which was opened by a new fervant that did not know him, he found his old friend Hatchway stalking, in the yard, with a night-cap on his head, and a pip Aa his mouth; and, advancing to him, took him by the hind before he had any intimation of his approach. The lieutenant, thus faluted by a ftranger, ftared at him in filent aftonishment, till he recollected his features, which were no fooner known, than, dashing the pipe upon the pavement, he exclaimed, " Smite my crofs-trees ! th'art welcome to port;" and hugged him in his arms with great affection. He then, by a cordial fqueeze, expressed his fatisfaction at feeing his old ship-mate Tom, who applying his whiftle to his mouth, the whole caftle echoed with his performance.

The fervants, hearing the well-known found, poured out in a tumult of joy; and, understanding that their young mafter was returned, raifed fuch a peal of acclamation, as aftonished the commodore and his lady, and infpired Julia with fuch an interesting prefage, that her heart began to throb with violence. Running out in the hurry and perturbation of her hope, the was fo much overwhelmed at fight of her brother, that fhe actually fainted in his arms. But from this trance fhe foon awak-ed; and Peregrine, having teftified his pleafure and affection, went up stairs, and prefented himfelf before his godfather and aunt. Mrs. Trunnion role and received him with a gracious embrace, bleffing God for his happy return from a land of impiety and vice, in which the hoped his morals had not been corrupted, nor his principles of religion altered or impaired. The old gentleman being confined to his chair, was ftruck dumb with pleafure at his appearance; and, having made divers ineffectual efforts to get up, at length discharged a volley of curfes against his own limbs, and held out his hand to his godfon, who kiffed it with great respect.

After he had finished his apostrophe to the gout, which was the daily and hourly subject of his executions, "Well, my lad (faid he), I care not how foon I go to the bottom, now I behold thee fafe in harbour again; and yet I tell a damn'd lic : I would I could keep afloat until I fhould fee a lufty boy of thy begetting. Odds my timbers ! I love thee fo well, that I believe thou art the fpawn of my own body: though I can give no account of thy being put upon the flocks." Then turning his eye upon Pipes, who by this time had penetrated into his apartment, and addreffed him with the utual falutation of "What cheer ?" " Ahey! (cried he) are you there you herring-faced fon of a fea-calf? What a flippery trick you played your old commander ! But come, you dog ! there's my fift ; I forgive you, for the love you bear to my godfon. Go, man your tackle, and hoift a cafk of ftrong beer into the yard, knock out the bung, and put a pump in it, for the use of all my fervants and neighbours; and, d'ye hear, let the patcrerocs be fired, and the garrifon illuminated, as rcjoicings for the fafe arrival of your mafter. By the Lord ! if I had the use of these damn'd shambling shanks, I would dance a hornpipe with the best of you."

The next object of his attention was Mr. Jolter, who was honoured with particular marks of diffinction, and the repeated promife of enjoying the living in his gift, as an acknowledgment of the care and differentiated with which he had fuperintended the education and morals of our hero. The governor was fo affected by the generofity of his patron, that the tears ran down his cheeks, while he expressed his gratitude, and the infinite fatisfaction he felt in contemplating the accomplifuments of his pupil.

Meanwhile, Pipes did not neglect the orders he had received: The beer was produced, the gates were thrown open for the admiffion of all comers, the whole houfe was lighted up, and the patereroes were difcharged in repeated volleys. Such phenomena could not fail to attract the notice of the neighbourhood. The club at Tunley's were aftonifhed at the report of the guns, which produced various conjectures among the members of that fagacious fociety. The landlord obferved, that, in all likelihood, the commodore was vifited by hobgoblins, and ordered the guns to be fired in token of diffrefs, as he had acted twenty years before, when he was annoyed by the fame grievance. The excifeman, with a waggifh fneer, exprefied his apprehention of Trunnion's death, in confequence of which the patereroes might be difcharged with an equivocal intent, either as fignals of his lady's forrow or rejoicing. 'The attorney fignified a fufpicion of Hatchway's being married to Mifs Pickle, and that the firing and illuminations were in honour of the nuptials; upon which Gamaliel difcovered fome faint figns of emotion, and, taking the pipe from his mouth, gave it as his opinion, that his fifter was brought to bed.

While they were thus bewildered in the maze of their own imaginations, a company of country men, who fat drinking in the kitchen, and whofe legs were more ready than their invention, fallied out to know the meaning of thefe exhibitions. Underftanding that there was a butt of ftrong beer a-broach in the yard, to which they were invited by the fervants, they faved themfelves the trouble and expence of returning to fpend the evening at the public houfe, and lifted themfelves under the banner of Tom Pipes, who prefided as director of this feftival.

The news of Peregrine's return being communicated to the parifh, the parfon, and three or four neighbouring gentlemen, who were wellwifhers to our hero, immediately repaired to the garrifon, in order to pay their compliments on this happy event, and were detained to fupper. An elegant entertainment was prepared by the direction of Mifs Julia, who was an excellent houfewife; and the commodore was fo invigorated with joy, that he feemed to have renewed his age.

Among those who honoured the occasion with his prefence was Mr. Clover, the young gentleman that made his address to Peregrine's fifter. His heart was so big with his passion, that, while the rest of the company were engrossed by their cups, he feized an opportunity of our hero's being detached from the conversation, and, in the impatience of his love, conjured him to confent to his happines; protessing, that he would comply with any terms of settlement that a man of his fortune could embrace, in favour of a young lady who was absolute mistress of his affection.

Our youth thanked him very politely for his favourable fentiments and honourable intention towards his fifter, and told him, that at prefent he faw no reafon to obftruct his defire; that he would confult Julia's own ininclinations, and confer with him about the means of gratifying his wifh; but, in the mean time, begged to be excufed from difcuffing any point of fuch importance to them both. Reminding him of the jovial purpose on which they were happily met, he promoted fuch a quick circulation of the bottle, that their mirth grew noify and obstreperous; they broke forth into repeated peals of laughter, without any previous incitement except that of claret. These explosions were fucceeded by Bacchanalian fongs, in which the old gentleman himfelf attempted to bear a fhare; the fedate governor fnapped time with his fingers, and the parish priest affisted in the chorus with a most expressive nakedness of countenance. Before midnight they were almost all pinned to their chairs, as if they had been fixed by the power of inchantment; and, what rendered the confinement ftill more unfortunate, every fervant in the houfe was in the fame fituation; fo that they were fain to take their repofe as they fat, and nodded at each other like a congregation of Anabaptifts.

Next day Peregrine communed with his fifter on the fubject of her match with Mr. Clover, who (fhe told him) had offered to fettle a jointure of four hundred pounds, and take her to wife without any expectation of a dowry. She moreover gave him to understand, that, in his abfence, the had received feveral meffages from her mother, commanding her to return to her father's houfe; but that fhe had refused to obey these orders, by the advice and injunction of her aunt and the commodore, which were indeed feconded by her own inclination; becaufe fhe had all the reafon in the world to believe, that her mother only wanted an opportunity of treating her with feverity and rancour. The refentment of that lady had been carried to fuch indecent lengths, that, feeing her daughter at church one day, the role up, before the parlon entered, and reviled her with great bitternels, in the face of the whole congregation.

CHAPTER LXVII.

Sees his fifter happily married. Vifits Emilia, who receives him according to his deferts.

HER brother being of opinion, that Mr. Clover's propofal was not to be neglected, especially as Julia's heart was engaged in his favour, communicated the affair to his uncle, who, with the approbation of Mrs. Trunnion, declared himfelf well fatisfied with the young man's addreffes, and defired that they might be buckled with all expedition, without the knowledge or concurrence of her parents, to whom (on account of their unnatural barbarity) fhe was not bound to pay the leaft regard. Though our adventurer entertained the fame fentiments of the matter, and the lover, dreading fome obstruction, earnessly begged the immediate condefcension of his mistrefs, she could not be prevailed upon to take fuch a material ftep, without having first folicited the permission of her father, refolved, neverthelefs, to comply with the dictates of her own heart, fhould his objections be frivolous or unjust.

Urged by this determination, her admirer waited upon Mr. Gamaliel at the public-houfe, and, with the appearance of great deference and refpect, made him acquainted with his affection for his daughter, communicated the particulars of his fortune, with the terms of fettlement he was ready to make; and in conclusion told him, that he would marry her without a portion. This last offer feemed to have fome weight with the father, who received it with civility, and promifed in a day or two to favour him with a final answer to his demand. He, accordingly, that fame evening confulted his wife, who being exafperated at the profpect of her daughter's independency, argued with the most virulent expostulation against the match, as an impudent scheme of her own planning, with a view of infulting her parents, towards whom the had already been guilty of the most vitious difobedience. In short, she used such remonstrances, as not only averted this weak hufband's inclination from the propofal which he had relifhed before, but even inftigated him to apply for a warrant to apprehend his daughter, on the fuppolition that the was about to beftow herfelf in marriage without his privity or confent.

The juffice of peace to whom this application was made, though he could not refule the order, yet, being no ftranger to the malevolence of the mother, which, together with Gamaliel's fimplicity, was notorious in the county, be fent an intimation of what had happened to the garrifon; upon which a couple of centinels were placed on the gate, and at the prefling folicitation of the lover, as well as the defire of the commodore, her brother, and aunt, Julia was wedded without further delay; the ceremony being performed by Mr. Jolter, becaufe the parifh priett prudently declined any occafion of giving offence, and the curate was too much in the intercit of their enemies to be employed in that office.

This domestic concern being fettled to the fatisfaction of our hero, he efcorted her next day to the house of her husband, who immediately wrote a letter to her father, declaring his reasons for having thus superfeded his authority; and Mrs. Pickle's mortification was unspeakable.

That the new married couple might be guarded againft all infult, our young gentleman and his friend Hatchway, with their adherents, lodged in Mr. Clover's houfe for fome weeks; during which they vifited their acquaintance in the neighbourhood, according to cuttom. When the tranquillity of their family was perfectly eftablished, and the contract of marriage executed in the prefence of the old commodore and his lady, who gave her niece five hundred pounds to purchafe jewels and clothes, Mr. Peregrine could no longer reftrain his impatience to fee his dear Emily; and told his uncle, that next day he propofed to ride acrofs the country, in order to visit his friend Gauntlet, whom he had not heard of for a long time.

The old gentleman, looking ftedfaftly in his face, "Ah! damn your cunning! (faid he) I find the anchor holds faft! I did fuppofe as how you would have flipt your cable, and changed your birth; but, I fee, when a young fellow is once brought up by a pretty wench, he may man his capitans and viol block, if he wool; but he'll as foon heave up the Pike of Teneriffe, as bring his anchor a-weigh! Odds heartlikins! had I known the young woman was Ned Gauntlet's daughter, I fhouldn't have thrown out fignal for leaving off chafe.'

Our adventurer was not a little furprifed to hear the commodore talk in this ftyle; and immediately conjectured that his friend Godfrey had informed him of the whole affair. Inftead of liftening to this approbation of his flame, with thofe transports of joy which he would have felt, had he retained his former fentiments, he was chagrined at Trunnion's declaration, and offended at the prefumption of the young foldier, in prefuming to difclofe the fecret with which he had intrusted him. Reddening with thefe reflections, he affured the commodore that he never had ferious thoughts of matrimony; fo that, if any perfon had told him he was under any engagement of that kind, he had abufed his ear; for he protefted that he would never contract fuch attachments without his knowledge and express permission.

Trunnion commended him for his prudent refolution, and obferved, that, though no perfon mentioned to him what promifes had paffed betwixt him and his fweetheart, it was very plain that he had made love to her, and therefore it was to be fuppofed that his intentions were honourable; for he could not believe he was fuch a rogue in his heart, as to endeavour to debauch the daughter of a brave officer, who had ferved his country with credit and reputation. Notwithstanding this remonftrance, which Pickle imputed to the commodore's ignorance of the world, he fet out for the habitation of Mrs. Gauntlet, with the unjuftifiable fentiments of a man of pleafure, who facrifices every confideration to the defire of his ruling appetite; and, as Winchefter lay in his way, refolved to vifit fome of his friends who lived in that place. It was in the houfe of one of thefe that he was informed of Emilia's being then in town with her mother; upon which he excufed himfelf from flaying to drink tea, and immediately repaired to their lodgings, according to the directions he had received.

When he arrived at the door, inftead of undergoing that perturbation of fpirits, which a lover in his interefting fituation might be fuppofed to feel, he fuffered no emotion but that of vanity and pride, favoured with an opportunity of felf-gratification, and entered his Emilia's apartment with the air of a conceited petit-maitre, rather than that of the refpectful admirer, when he visits the object of his passion, after an absence of feventeen months.

The young lady, having been very much difobliged at his mortifying neglect of her brother's letter, had fummoned all her own pride and refolution to her aid; and, by means of a happy difpolition, fo far overcame her chagrin at his indifference, that fhe was able to behave in his prefence with apparent tranquillity and eafe. She was even pleafed to find he had, by accident, chofen a time for his vifit when the was furrounded by two or three young gentlemen, who profeffed themfelves her admirers. Our gallant was no fooner announced, than the collected all her coquetry, put on the gayest air she could assume, and contrived to giggle just as he appeared at the room door. The compliments of falutation being performed, fhe welcomed him to England in a carelefs manner, afked the news of Paris, and, before he could make any reply, defired one of the other gentlemen to proceed with the fequel of that comical adventure, in the relation of which he had been interrupted.

Peregrine fmiled within himfelf at this behaviour, which (without all doubt) he believed the had affected to punish him for his unkind filence while he was abroad, being fully perfuaded that her heart was abfolutely at his devotion. On this fuppolition, he practifed his Parifian improvements on the art of conversation, and uttered a thousand prettineffes in the way of compliment, with fuch incredible rotation of tongue, that his rivals were ftruck dumb with aftonifhment, and Emilia fretted out of all temper, as feeing herfelf deprived of the prerogative of the fex. He perfifted, however, in this furprifing loquacity, until the reft of the company thought proper to withdraw, and then contracted his difcourfe into the focus of love, which now put on a very different appearance from that which it had formerly worn. Inftead of awful veneration, which her prefence ufed to infpire, that chaftity of fentiment, and delicacy of expression, he now gazed upon her with the eyes of a libertine, he glowed with the impatience of defire, talked in a ftrain that barely kept within the bounds of decency, and attempted to fnatch fuch favours, as fhe, in the tendernefs of mutual acknowledgment, had once vouchfafed to beflow.

Grieved and offended as fhe was, at this palpable alteration in his carriage, fhe difdained to remind him of his former deportment, and, with diffembled good humour, rallied him on the progrefs he had made in gallantry and addrefs: But, far from fubmitting to the liberties he would have taken, fhe kept her perfon facred from his touch, and would not even fuffer him to ravifh a kifs of her fair hand; fo that he reaped no other advantage from the exercise of his talents, during this interview, which lafted a whole hour, than that of knowing he had overrated his own importance, and that Emily's heart was not a garrifon likely to furrender at difcretion.

At length his addreffes were interrupted by the arrival of the mother, who had gone abroad to vifit by herfelf; and the converfation becoming more general, he underftood that Godfrey was at London, foliciting for a lieutenancy that had fallen vacant in the regiment to which he belonged; and that Mifs Sophy was at home with her father.

Though our adventurer had not met with all the fuccefs he expected by his first visit, he did not despair of reducing the fortres, believing that in time there would be a mutiny in his favour, and accordingly carried on the fiege for feveral days, without profiting by his perfeverance; till, at length, having attended the ladies to their own house in the country, he began to look upon this adventure as time mission and resolved to discontinue his attack, in hopes of meeting with a more favourable occafion; being, in the mean time, ambitious of displaying, in an higher sphere, those qualifications which his vanity told him were at prefent mission.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

He attends his uncle with great affection during a fit of illnefs. Sets out again for London. Meets with his friend Godfrey, who is prevailed upon to accompany him to Bath; on the road to which place they chance to dine with a perfor who entertains them with a curious account of a certain company of adventurers.

Thus determined, he took leave of Emilia and her mother, on pretence of going to London upon fome urgent bufinefs, and returned to the garrifon, leaving the good old lady very much concerned, and the daughter incenfed at his behaviour, which was the more unexpected, becaufe Godfrey had told them, that the commodore approved of his nephew's paffion.

Our adventurer found his uncle fo ill of the gout, which, for the first time, had taken possefition of his flomach, that his life was in imminent danger, and the whole family in diforder : He therefore took the reins of government in his own hands, fent for all the physicians in the neighbourhood, and attended him in perfon with the most affectionate care, during the whole fit, which lasted a fortnight, and then retired before the ftrength of his constitution.

When the old gentleman recovered his health, he was fo penetrated with Peregrine's behaviour, that he actually would have made over to him his whole fortune, and depended upon him for his own fubfiftence, had not our youth oppofed the execution of the deed with all his influence and might, and even perfuaded him to make a will, in which his friend Hatchway, and all his other adherents, were liberally remembered, and his aunt provided for on her own terms. This material point being fettled, he, with his uncle's permiffion, departed for London, after having feen the family affairs eftablifhed under the direction and administration of Mr. Jolter and the lieutenant; for, by this time, Mrs. Trunnion was wholly occupied with her fpiritual concerns.

On his first arrival at London, he fent a card to the lodgings of Gauntlet, in confequence of a direction from his mother; and that young gentleman waited on him next morning, though not with that alacrity of countenance and warmth of friendship which might have been expected from the intimacy of their former connection. Nor was Peregrine himfelf actuated by the fame unreferved affection for the foldier which he had formerly eutertained. Godfrey, over and above the offence he had taken at Pickle's omition in point of corresponding with him, had been informed, by a letter from his mother, of the youth's cavalier behaviour to Emilia, during his last refidence at Winchester; and our young gentleman (as we have already observed) was disgusted at the supposed discovery which the foldier had made in his absence to the commodore. They perceived their mutual umbrage at meeting, and received each other with that civility of referve which commonly happens between two persons when their friendship is in the wane.

Gauntlet at once divined the caufe of the other's difpleafure; and, in order to vindicate his own character, after the first compliments were passed, took the opportunity, on inquiring after the health of the commodore, to tell Peregrine, that, while he tarried at the garrifon, on his return from Dover, the fubject of the conversation, one night, happening to turn on our hero's paffion, the old gentleman had expressed his concern about that affair; and, among other obfervations, faid, he fuppofed the object of his love was fome paltry huffy, whom he had picked up when he was a boy at fchool. Upon which, Mr. Hatchway affured him, that fhe was a young woman of as good a family as any in the county; and, after having prepofieffed him in her favour, ventured (out of the zeal of his friendship) to tell who she was : Wherefore, the difcovery was not to be imputed to any other caufe; and he hoped Mr. Pickle would acquit him of all fhare in the transaction.

Peregrine was very well pleafed to be thus undeceived; his countenance immediately cleared up, the formality of his behaviour relaxed into his ufual familiarity; he afked pardon for his unmannerly neglect of Godfrey's letter, which, he protefled, was not owing to any difregard, or abatement of friendfhip, but to a hurry of youthful engagements, in confequence of which he had procraftinated his anfwer from time to time, until he was ready to return in perfon.

The young foldier was contented with this apology; and, as Pickle's intention, with refpect to his fifter, was still dubious and undeclared, he did not think it was incumbent upon him, as yet, to express any refentment on that fcore; but was wife enough to forefee, that the renewal of his intimacy with our young gentleman might be the means of reviving that flame which had been diffipated by a variety of new ideas. With those fentiments, he laid afide all referve, and their communication immediately refumed its former channel. Peregrine made him acquainted with all the adventures in which he had been engaged fince their parting; and he, with the fame confidence, related the remarkable incidents of his own fate; among other things, giving him to understand, that, upon obtaining a commission in the army, the father of his dear Sophy, without once inquiring about the occafion of his promotion, had not only favoured him with his countenance in a much greater degree than heretofore, but alfo contributed his interest, and even promifed the affiftance of his purfe, in procuring for him a lieutenancy, which he was then foliciting with all his power; whereas, if he had not been enabled, by a most accidental piece of good fortune, to lift himfelf into the fphere of an officer, he had all the reafon in the world to believe that this gentleman, and all the reft of his wealthy relations, would have fuffered him to languish in obfcurity and diffrefs; and by turning his misfortune into reproach, made it a plea for their own want of generofity and friendship.

Peregrine, underftanding the fituation of his friend's affairs, would have accommodated him upon the inftant with a fum to accelerate the paffage of his commiflion through the offices; but, being too well acquainted with his fcrupulous difpofition, to manifest his benevolence in that manner, he found means to introduce himself to one of the gentlemen of the war office, who was fo well fatisfied with the arguments he used in behalf of his friend, that Godfrey's business was transacted in a very few days, though he himself knew nothing of his interest being thus reinforced.

By this time, the feafon at Bath was begun; and our hero, panting with the defire of diftinguishing himfelf at that refort of the fashionable world, communicated his defign of going thither to his friend Godfrey, whom he importuned to accompany him in the excursion; and leave of abfence from his regiment being obtained by the influence of Peregrine's new quality friends, the two companions departed from London in a post chaife, attended, as ufual, by the valet de chambre and Pipes, who were become almost as necessfary to our adventurer as any two of his own organs.

At the inn, when they alighted for dinner, Godfrey perceived a perfon walking by himfelf in the yard, with a very penfive air, and, upon obferving him more narrowly, recognifed him to be a profeffed gamefter, whom he had formerly known at Tunbridge. On the ftrength of this acquaintance, he accofted the peripatetic, who knew him immediately; and, in the fulnefs of his grief and vexation, told him, that he was now on his return from Bath, where he had been ftripped by a company of fharpers, who refented that he fhould prefume to trade upon his own bottom.

Peregrine, who was extremely curious in his inquiries, imagining that he might learn fome entertaining and uleful anecdotes from this artift, invited him to dinner, and was accordingly fully informed of all the political fyftems at the Bath. He understood that there was at London one great company of adventurers, who employed agents in all the different branches of impolition throughout the whole kingdom of England, allowing these ministers a certain proportion of the profits accruing from their induftry and fkill, and referving the greatest share for the benefit of the common flock, which was chargeable with the expence of fitting out individuals in their various purfuits, as well as with the loss fuftained in the course of their adventures. Some, whofe perfons and qualifications are by the company judged adequate to the tafk, exert their talents in making love to ladies of fortune, being accommodated with money and accoutrements for that purpofe, after having given their bonds payable to one or other of the directors, on the day of marriage, for certain fums, proportioned to the dowries they are to receive. Others, versed in the doctrine of chances, and certain fecret expedients, frequent all those places where games of Vol. II. Bb hazard are allowed; and fuch as are mafters in the arts of billiards, tennis, and bowls, are continually lying in wait, in all the fcenes of thefe diversions, for the ignorant and unwary. A fourth clafs attend horfe-races, being skilled in those mysterious practices by which the knowing-ones are taken in. Nor is this community unfurnished with those who lay wanton wives and old rich widows under contribution, and extort money, by profituting themfelves to the embraces of their own fex, and then threatening their admirers with profecution. But their most important returns are made by that body of their undertakers who exercife their understandings in the innumerable stratagems of the card-table, at which no fharper can be too infamous to be received, and even careffed by perfons of the highest rank and distinction. Among other articles of intelligence, our young gentleman learned, that those agents, by whom their guest was broke, and expelled from Bath, had constituted a bank against all sporters, and monopolized the advantage in all forts of play. He then told Gauntlet, that, if he would put himfelf under his direction, he would return with them, and lay fuch a fcheme as would infallibly ruin the whole fociety at billiards, as he knew that Godfrey excelled them all in his knowledge of that game.

The foldier excufed himfelf from engaging in any party of that kind; and after dinner the travellers parted; but, as the conversation between the two friends turned upon the information they had received, Peregrine projected a plan for punishing those villanous pess of fociety, who prey upon their fellow-creatures; and it was put in execution by Gauntlet in the following manner.

CHAPTER LXIX.

Godfrey executes a fcheme at Bath, by which a whole company of tharpers is ruined.

On the evening after their arrival at Bath, Godfrey, who had kept himfelf up all day for that purpofe, went in boots to the billiard-table; and, two gentlemen being at play, began to bet with fo little appearance of judgment, that one of the adventurers then prefent was inflamed with the defire of profiting by his inexperience; and, when the table was vacant, invited him to take a game for amufement. The foldier, affuming the air of a felf-conceited dupe, answered, that he did not choose to throw away his time for nothing, but, if he pleafed, would piddle for a crown a game. This declaration was very agreeable to the other, who wanted to be further confirmed in the opinion he had conceived of the ftranger, before he would play for any thing of confequence. The party being accepted, Gauntlet put off his coat, and, beginning with feeming eagernefs, won the first game, becaufe his antagonilt kept up his play with a view of encouraging him to wager a greater fum. The foldier purpofely bit at the hook, the flakes were doubled, and he was again victorious, by the permiffion of his competitor. He now began to yawn; and observing, that it was not worth his while to proceed in fuch a childifh manner; the other fwore, in an affected paffion, that he would play with him for twenty guineas. The propofal being embraced (through the connivance of Godfrey) the money was won by the fharper, who exerted his dexterity to the uttermost, fearing that otherwise his adverfary would decline continuing the game.

Godfrey thus conquered, pretended to lofe his temper, curfed his own ill luck, fwore that the table had a caft, and that the balls did not run true, changed his maft, and, with great warmth, challenged his enemy to double the fum. The gamefter, who feigned reluctance, complied with his defire ; and, having got the two first hazards, offered to lay one hundred guineas to fifty on the game. The odds were taken; and Godfrey having allowed himfelf to be overcome, began to rage with great violence, broke the maft to pieces, threw the balls out at the window, and, in the fury of his indignation, defied his antagonist to meet him to-morrow, when he should be refrethed from the fatigue of travelling. This was a very welcome invitation to the gamefter, who, imagining that the foldier would turn out a most beneficial prize, affured him, that he would not fail to be there next forenoon, in order to give him his revenge.

Gauntlet went home to his lodgings, fully certified of his own fuperiority; and took his meafures with Peregrine, touching the profecution of their fcheme; while his opponent made a report of his fuccefs to the brethren of the gang, who refolved to be prefent at the decifion of the match, with a view of taking advantage of the ftranger's paffionate difpolition.

Affairs being thus concerted on both fides, the players met, according to appointment, and the room was immediately filled with fpectators, who either came thither by accident, curiofity, or defign. The match was fixed for one hundred pounds a game, the principals chofe their instruments, and laid alide their coats, and one of the knights of the order proffered to lay another hundred on the head of his affociate. Godfrey took him upon the inftant. A fecond worthy of the fame clafs, feeing him fo eager, challenged him to treble the fum; and his propofal met with the fame reception, to the aftonishment of the company, whole expectation was raifed to a very interesting pitch. The game was begun, and the foldier having loft the first hazard, the odds were offered by the confederacy with great vociferation; but nobody would run fuch a rifk in favour of a perfon who was utterly unknown. The fharper having gained the fecond alfo, the noife increafed to a furprifing clamour, not only of the gang, but likewife of almost all the spectators, who defired to lay two to one against the brother of Emilia.

Peregrine, who was prefent, perceiving the cupidity of the affociation fufficiently inflamed, all of a fudden opened his mouth, and anfwered their bets, to the amount of twelve hundred pounds; which were immediately depofited, on both fides, in money and notes; fo that this was, perhaps, the most important game that ever was played at billiards. Gauntlet seeing the agreement settled, struck his antagonist's ball into the pocket in a twinkling, though it was in one of those fituations which are supposed to be against the striker. The betters were a little difcomposed at this event, for which, however, they confoled themfelves, by imputing the fuccefs to accident; but when, at the very next stroke, he fprung it over the table, their countenances underwent an instantaneous distraction of feature, and they waited, in the most dreadful fuspense, for the next hazard, which being likewife taken with infinite eafe by the foldier, the blood forfook their cheeks, and the interjection Zounds ! pronounced with a look of confternation, and in a tone of defpair, proceeded from every mouth at the fame inftant of time. They were overwhelmed with horror and aftonishment at feeing three hazards taken in as many ftrokes, from a perfon of their friend's dexterity; and fhrewdly fuspected, that the whole was a scheme preconcerted for their destruction : On this fuppolition, they changed the note, and attempted to hedge for their own indemnification, by proposing to lay the odds in favour of Gauntlet; but so much was the opinion of the company altered by that young gentleman's fuccefs, that no body would venture to efpouse the caufe of his competitor, who, chancing to improve his game by the addition of another lucky hit, diminished the concern, and revived the hopes of his adherents. But this gleam of fortune did not long continue. Godfrey collected his whole art and capacity, and augmenting his fcore to number ten, indulged himfelf with a view of the whole fraternity. The vifages of these professions had adopted different fhades of complexion at every hazard he had taken; from their natural colour they had fhifted into a fallow hue; from thence into pale; from pale into yellow, which degenerated into a mahogany tint; and now they faw feventeen hundred pounds of their flock depending upon a fingle ftroke, they ftood like fo many fwarthy Moors, jaundiced with terror and vexation. The fire which naturally glowed in the cheeks and nofe of the player, feemed utterly extinct, and his carbuncles exhibited a livid appearance, as if a gangrene had already made fome progress in his face; his hand began to shake, and his whole frame was feized with fuch trepidation, that he was fain to fwallow a bumper of brandy, in order to reestablish the tranquillity of his nerves. This expedient, however, did not produce the defired effect; for he aimed the ball at the lead with fuch difcomposure, that it ftruck on the wrong fide, and came off at an angle which directed it full in the middle hole. This fatal accident was attended with an universal groan, as if the whole universe had gone to wreck; and notwithstanding that tranquillity for which adventurers are fo remarkable, this lofs made fuch an impression upon them all, that each in particular manifefted his chagrin, by the moft violent emotions. One turned up his eyes to heaven, and bit his nether lip; another gnawed his fingers, while he ftalked acrofs the room; a third blafphemed with horrid imprecations; and he who played the party fneaked off, grinding his teeth together, with a look that baffles all defcription, and, as he croffed the threfhold, exclaiming, "A damu'd bite, by G-d !"

The victors, after having infulted them, by afking, if they were difpofed for another chance, carried of their winning, with the appearance of great composure, though in their hearts they were transported with unspeakable joy; : ot fo much on account of the booty they had gained, as in confideration of having fo effectually deftroyed fuch a neft of pernicious mifcreants.

Peregrine, believing that now he had found an opportunity of ferving his friend, without giving offence to the delicacy of his honour, told him, upon their arrival at their lodgings, that fortune had at length enabled him to become in a manner independent, or at leaft make himfelf eafy in his circumftances, by purchafing a company with the money he had won. So faying, he put his fhare of the fuccefs in Gauntlet's hand, as a fum that of right belonged to him, and promifed to write in his behalf to a nobleman, who had intereft enough to promote fuch a quick rife in the fervice.

Godfrey thanked him for his obliging intention, but abfolutely refuted, with great loftiness of demeanour, to appropriate to his own use any part of the money which Pickle had gained, and feemed affronted at the other's entertaining a fentiment fo unworthy of his character. He would not even accept, in the way of loan, fuch an addition to his own flock, as would amount to the price of a company of foot; but expressed great confidence in the future exertion of that talent which had been bleffed with fuch a profperous beginning. Our hero finding him thus obstinately deaf to the voice of his own interest, refolved to govern himfelf, in his next endeavours of friendfhip, by his experience of this ticklish punctilio; and, in the mean time, gave a handfome benefaction to the hofpital, out of these first-fruits of the fuccess in play, and referved two hundred pounds for a fet of diamond earrings and folitaire, which he intended for a prefent to Mifs Emily.

CHAPTER LXX.

The two friends eclipfe all their competitors in gallantry, and practife a pleafant project of revenge upon the phylicians of the place.

THE fame of their exploit against the fharpers was immediately diffused through all the companies at Bath; fo that, when our adventurers appeared in public, they were pointed out by an hundred extended fingers, and confidered as confummate artifts in all the different species of finesse, which they would not fail to practife with the first opportunity. Nor was this opinion of their characters any obstacle to their reception into the fashionable parties in the place; but, on the contrary, such a recommendation, which (as I have already hinted) never fails to operate for the advantage of the possibility.

This first adventure, therefore, ferved them as an introduction to the company at Bath, who were not a little furprifed to find their expectations baffled by the conduct of the two companions; becaufe, far from engaging deeply at play, they rather fhunned all occasions of gaming, and directed their attention to gallantry, in which our hero fhone unrivalled. His external qualifications, exclufive of any other merit, were ftrong enough to captivate the common run of the female fex; and thefe, reinforced with a fprightlinefs of converfation, and a most infinuating addrefs, became irrefiftible, even by those who were fortified with pride, caution, or indifference. But, among all the nymphs of this gay place, he did not meet with one object that difputed the empire of his heart with Emilia, and therefore he divided his attachment according to the fuggestions of vanity and whim; fo that, before he had refided a fortnight at Bath, he had fet all the ladies by the ears, and furnished all the hundred tongues of scandal with full employment. The fplendour of his appearance excited the inquiries of envy, which, instead of dif-covering any circumstance to his prejudice, was curfed B b iiij with the information of his being a young gentleman of a good family, and heir to an immenfe fortune.

The countenance of fome of his quality friends, who arrived at Bath, confirmed this piece of intelligence : Upon which his acquaintance was courted and cultivated with great affiduity; and he met with fuch advances from fome of the fair fex, as rendered him extremely fortunate in his amours. Nor was his friend Godfrey a stranger to favours of the fame kind; his accomplifhments were exactly calculated for the meridian of female tafte; and, with certain individuals of that fex, his mulcular frame, and the robuft connection of his limbs, were more attractive than the delicate proportions of his companion. He accordingly reigned paramount among those inamoratas who were turned of thirty, without being under the neceffity of proceeding by tedious addreffes, and was thought to have co-operated with the waters in removing the fterility of certain ladies, who had long undergone the reproach and difguft of their hufbands; while Peregrine fet up his throne among those who laboured under the difeafe of celibacy, from the pert mils of fifteen, who, with a fluttering heart, toffes her head, bridles up, and giggles involuntarily at fight of an handfome young man, to the ftaid maid of twenty-eight, who, with a demure afpect, moralizes on the vanity of beauty, the folly of youth, and fimplicity of woman, and expatiates on friendship, benevolence, and good fenfe, in the ftyle of a Platonic philofopher.

In fuch a diverfity of difpofitions, his conquefts were attended with all the heart-burnings, animofities, and turmoils of jealoufy and fpite. The younger clafs took all opportunities of mortifying their feniors in public, by treating them with that indignity which (contrary to the general privilege of age) is, by the confent and connivance of mankind, levelled againft thofe who have the misfortune to come under the denomination of old maids; and thefe laft retorted their hoftilities in the private machinations of flander, fupported by experience and fubtilty of invention. Not one day paffed in which fome new ftory did not circulate, to the prejudice of one or other of thofe rivals.

the moralists, with whom he had been engaged in converfation, he was immediately accofted by a number of the opposite faction, who, with ironical fmiles, upbraided him with cruelty to the poor lady he had left, exhorted him to have compassion on her fufferings; and, turning their eyes towards the object of their interceffion, broke forth into an universal peal of laughter. On the other hand, when Peregrine, in confequence of having danced with one of the minors overnight, vifited her in the morning, the Platonifts immediately laid hold on the occafion, tafked their imaginations, affociated ideas, and, with fage infinuations, retailed a thousand circumstances of the interview, which never had any foundation in truth. They observed, that, if girls are determined to behave with such indifcretion, they must lay their accounts with incurring the cenfure of the world; that fhe in queftion was old enough to act more circumfpectly; and wondered that her mother would permit any young fellow to approach the chamber while her daughter was naked in bed. As for the fervants peeping through the key-hole, to be fure it was an unlucky accident; but people ought to be upon their guard against fuch curiofity, and give their domeftics no caufe to employ their penetration. Thefe and other fuch reflections were occasionally whispered as fecrets among those who were known to be communicative; fo that, in a few hours, it became the general topic of difcourfe; and, as it had been divulged under injunctions of fecrecy, it was almost impossible to trace the fcandal to its origin; becaufe every perfon concerned must have promulgated her own breach of truft, in difcovering her author of the report.

Peregrine, inftead of allaying, rather exafperated this contention, by an artful diftribution of his attention among the competitors; well knowing, that, fhould his regard be converged into one point, he would foon forfeit the pleafure he enjoyed in feeing them at variance; for both parties would join against the common enemy, and his favourite would be perfecuted by the whole coalition, He perceived, that, among the fecret agents of fcandal, none were fo bufy as the phyficians, a clafs of animals who live in this place, like fo many ravens hovering about a carcafs, and even ply-for employment, like fcullers at Hungerford flairs. The greatest part of them have correspondence in London, who make it their business to inquire into the hiltory, character, and diffemper of every one that repairs to Bath, for the benefit of the waters; and if they cannot procure intereft to recommend their medical friends to thefe patients before they fet out, they at least furnish them with a previous account of what they could collect, that their correspondents may use this intelligence for their own advantage. By thefe means, and the affiftance of flattery and affurance, they often infinuate themfelves into the acquaintance of ftrangers, and, by confulting their difpolitions, become neceflary and fubfervient to their prevailing paffions. By their connection with apothecaries and nurfes, they are informed of all the private occurrences in each family, and therefore enabled to gratify the rancour of malice, amufe the fpleen of peevish indisposition, and entertain the eagerness of impertinent curiofity.

In the courfe of thefe occupations, which frequently affected the reputation of our two adventurers, this whole body fell under the displeasure of our hero, who, after divers confultations with his friend, concerted a ftratagem, which was practifed upon the faculty in this manner. Among those who frequented the pump-room, was an old officer, whole temper, naturally impatient, was, by repeated attacks of the gout, which had almost deprived him of the use of his limbs, sublimated into a remarkable degree of virulence and perversenes: He imputed the inveteracy of his diftemper to the mal-practice of a furgeon who had administered to him, while he laboured under the confequences of an unfortunate amour; and this fuppofition had infpired him with an unfurmountable antipathy to all the professors of the medical art, which was more and more confirmed by the information of a friend at London, who had told him, that it was a common practice among the phylicians at Bath to diffuade their patients from drinking the water, that the cure, and in confequence their attendance, might be longer protracted.

Thus prepoffefied, he had come to Bath, and, conformable to a few general inftructions he had received, ufed the waters without any farther direction, taking all occafions of manifefting his hatred and contempt of the fons of Æfculipius, both by fpeech and gefticulations, and even by purfuing a regimen quite contrary to that which he knew they preferibed to others who feemed to be exactly in his condition. But he did not find his account in this method, how fuccefsful foever it may have been in other cafes. His complaints, inftead of vanifhing, were every day more and more enraged; and at length he was confined to his bed, where he lay blafpheming from morn to night, and from night to morn, though ftill more determined than ever to adhere to his former maxims.

In the midst of his torture, which was become the common joke of the town, being circulated through the industry of the physicians, who triumphed in his difaster, Peregrine, by means of Mr. Pipes, employed a country fellow, who had come to market, to run with great hafte, early one morning, to the lodgings of all the doctors in town, and defire them to attend the colonel with all imaginable defpatch. In confequence of this fummons, the whole faculty put themfelves in motion; and three of the foremost arriving at the fame instant of time, far from complimenting one another with the door, each feparately effayed to enter, and the whole triumvirate fluck in the paffage. While they remained thus wedged together, they defcried two of their brethren posting towards the fame goal, with all the fpeed that God had enabled them to exert; upon which they came to a parley, and agreed to ftand by one another. This covenant being made, they difentangled themfelves, and, inquiring about the patient, were told by the fervant that he had just fallen afleep.

Having received this intelligence, they took poffeffion of his antichamber, and fhut the door, while the reft of the tribe pofted themfelves on the outfide as they arrived; fo that the whole paffage was filled, from the top of the ftair-cafe to the ftreet-door; and the people of the houfe, together with the colonel's fervant, ftruck dumb with aftonifhment. The three leaders of this learned gang had no fooner made their lodgment good, than they began to confult about the patient's malady, which every one of them pretended to have confidered with great care and affiduity. The first who gave his opinion, faid, the diftemper was an obstinate arthritis; the fecond affirmed, that it was no other than a confirmed pox; and the third fwore it was an inveterate fcurvy. This diverfity of opinions was supported by a variety of quotations from medical authors, ancient as well as modern ; but thefe were not of fufficient authority, or at least not explicit enough to decide the difpute; for there are many fchifms in medicine, as well as in religion, and each fect can quote the fathers in fupport of the tenets they profess. In fhort, the contention rofe to fuch a pitch of clamour, as not only alarmed the brethren on the flair, but alfo awaked the patient from the first nap he had enjoyed in the space of ten whole days. Had it been fimply waking, he would have been obliged to them for the noise that diffurbed him; for, in that cafe, he would have been relieved from the tortures of hell fire, to which, in his dream, he fancied himfelf expofed : But this dreadful vifion had been the refult of that impreffion which was made upon his brain by the intolerable anguish of his joints; fo that, when he waked, the pain, inftead of being allayed, was rather aggravated by a great acuteness of fensation; and the confused vociferation in the next room invading his ears at the fame time, he began to think his dream was realized, and, in the pangs of defpair, applied himfelf to a bell that flood by his bedfide, which he rung with great violence and perfeverance.

This alarm put an immediate ftop to the difputation of the three doctors, who, upon this notice of his being awake, rufhed into his chamber without ceremony; and two of them feizing his arms, the third made the like application to one of his temples. Before the patient could recollect himfelf from the amazement which had laid hold on him at this unexpected irruption, the room was filled by the reft of the faculty, who followed the fervant that entered in obedience to his mafter's call; and the bed was in a moment furrounded by thefe gaunt minifters of death. The colonel feeing himfelf befet with fuch an affemblage of folemn vifages and figures, which he had always confidered with the utmost detestation and abhorrence, was incenfed to a most inexpressible degree of indignation; and fo infpirited by his rage, that, though his tongue denied its office, his other limbs performed their functions : He disengaged himself from the triumvirate, who had taken posseficition of his body, fprung out of bed with incredible agility, and, feizing one of his crutches, applied it fo effectually to one of the three, just as he ftooped to examine the patient's water, that his tie periwig dropped into the pot, while he himself fell motionless on the floor.

This fignificant explanation difconcerted the whole fraternity; every man turned his face, as if it were by inftinct, towards the door; and the retreat of the community being obstructed by the efforts of individuals, confusion and tumultuous uproar enfued : For the colonel, far from limiting his prowefs to the first exploit, handled his weapon with aftonishing vigour and dexterity, without respect of persons; so that few or none of them had escaped without marks of his displeasure-when his spirits failed, and he funk down again quite exhausted on his bed. Favoured by this respite, the discomfited faculty collected their hats and wigs, which had fallen off in the fray; and perceiving the affailant too much enfeebled to renew the attack, fet up their throats together, and loudly threatened to profecute him feverely for fuch an outrageous affault.

By this time the landlord had interpofed; and inquiring into the caufe of the difturbance, was informed of what had happened by the complainants, who, at the fame time, giving him to underftand that they had been feverally fummoned to attend the colonel that morning, he affured them, that they had been impofed upon by fome wag; for his lodger had never dreamed of confulting any one of their profeffion.

Thunderstruck at this declaration, the general clamour instantaneously ceased; and each, in particular, at once comprehending the nature of the joke, they sneaked filently off with the loss they had suftained, in unutterable shame and mortification; while Peregrine and his friend, who took care to be passing that way by accident, made a full stop at sight of such an extraordinary efflux, and enjoyed the countenance and condition of every one as he appeared; nay, even made up to some of those who feemed most affected with their situation, and mischievously tormented them with questions, touching this unufual congregation; then, in confequence of the information they received from the landlord and the colonel's valet, fubjected the fufferers to the ridicule of all the company in town. As it would have been impoffible for the authors of this farce to keep themfelves concealed from the indefatigat le inquiries of the phyficians, they made no fecret of their having directed the whole; though they took care to own it in fuch an ambiguous manner, as afforded no handle of profecution.

CHAPTER LXXI.

Peregrine humbles a noted Hector, and meets with a ftrange character at the house of a certain lady.

AMONG those who never failed to refide at Bath during the feafon, was a certain perfon, who, from the most abject mifery, had, by his industry and art at play, amaffed about fifteen thousand pounds; and though his character was notorious, infinuated himfelf fo far into the fayour of what is called the beft company, that very few private parties of pleafure took place in which he was not principally concerned. He was of a gigantic stature, a most intrepid countenance; and his disposition, naturally overbearing, had, in the courfe of his adventures and fuccefs, acquired a most intolerable degree of infolence and vanity. By the ferocity of his features, and audacity of his behaviour, he had obtained a reputation for the most undaunted courage, which had been confirmed by divers adventures, in which he had humbled the most affuming heroes of his own fraternity : So that he now reigned chief Hector of the place with unqueftioned authority.

With this fon of fortune was Peregrine one evening engaged at play, and fo fuccefsful, that he could not help informing his friend of his good luck. Godfrey hearing the defcription of the lofer, immediately recognifed the perfon, whom he had known at Tunbridge; and affuring Pickle that he was a fharper of the first water, cautioned him against any further connection with fuch a dangerous companion, who (he affirmed) had fuffered him to win a fmall fum, that he might be encouraged to lofe a much greater fum upon fome other occasion.

Our young gentleman treafured up this advice; and though he did not fcruple to give the gamefter an opportunity of retrieving his lofs, when he next day demanded his revenge, he abfolutely refused to proceed, after he had The other, who confidered him refunded his winning. as a hot-headed unthinking youth, endeavoured to inflame his pride to a continuance of the game, by treating his skill with fcorn and contempt; and, among other farcaftic expressions, advised him to go to school again, before he pretended to engage with mafters of the art. Our hero, incenfed at his arrogance, replied with great warmth, that he knew himfelf fufficiently qualified for playing with men of honour, who deal upon the fquare, and hoped he fhould always deem it infamous either to learn or practife the tricks of a profeffed gamester. "Blood and thunder ! meaning me, Sir ? (cried this artift, raifing his voice, and curling his vifage into a most intimidating frown). Zounds! I'll cut the throat of any fcoundrel who has the prefumption to fuppofe that I don't play as honourably as e'er a nobleman in the kingdom : And I infift upon an explanation from you, Sir; or, by hell and brimftone ! I shall expect other fort of fatisfaction." Peregrine (whofe blood by this time boiled within him) anfwered without hefitation, " Far from thinking your demand unreasonable, I will immediately explain myself without referve, and tell you, that, upon unqueftionable authority, I believe you to be an impudent rafcal and common cheat."

The Hector was fo amazed and confounded at the freedom of this declaration, which he thought no man on earth would venture to make in his prefence, that, for fome minutes, he could not recollect himfelf; but at length, whifpered a challenge in the ear of our hero, which was accordingly accepted. When they arrived next morning upon the field, the gamefter, arming his countenance with all its terrors, advanced with a fword of a monftrous length, and putting himfelf in a pofture, called aloud in a moft terrific voice, "Draw, damn ye, draw; I will this inftant fend you to your fathers." The youth was not flow in complying with his defire; his weapon was unsheathed in a moment, and he began the attack with fuch unexpected fpirit and addrefs, that his adverfary, having made thift with great difficulty to parry the first pass, retreated a few paces, and demanded a parley, in which he endeavoured to perfuade the young man, that to lay a man of his character under the neceffity of chaftifing his infolence, was the most rash and inconfiderate ftep that he could poffibly have taken; but that he had compassion upon his youth, and was willing to fpare him if he would furrender his fword, and promife to afk pardon in public for the offence he had given. Pickle was fo much exafperated at this unparalleled effrontery, that, without deigning to make the leaft reply, he flung his own hat in the propofer's face, and renewed the charge with fuch undaunted agility, that the gamefter, finding himfelf in manifest hazard of his life, betook himfelf to his heels, and fled homewards with incredible fpeed, being closely purfued by Peregrine, who, having sheathed his fword, pelted him with stones as he ran, and compelled him to go, that fame day, into banifhment from Bath, where he had domineered fo long.

By this achievement, which was the fubject of aftonifhment to all the company, who had looked upon the fugitive as a perfon of heroic courage, our adventurer's reputation was rendered formidable in all its circumstances; although he thereby difobliged a good many people of fashion, who had contracted an intimacy of friendship with the exile, and who refented his difgrace, as if it had been the misfortune of a worthy man. Thefe generous patrons, however, bore a very fmall proportion to those who were pleafed with the event of the duel; becaufe, in the courfe of their refidence at Bath, they had either been infulted or defrauded by the challenger. Nor was this inftance of our hero's courage unacceptable to the ladies, few of whom could now refift the united force of fuch accomplishments. Indeed, neither he nor his friend Godfrey would have found much difficulty in picking up an agreeable companion for life; but Gauntlet's heart was pre-engaged to Sophy; and Pickle, exclusive of his attachment to Emily, which was stronger than he himself imagined, poffeffed fuch a fhare of ambition as could not be fatisfied with the conquest of any female he beheld at Bath.

His vifits were, therefore, promifcuous, without any other view than that of amufement; and though his pride was flattered by the advances of the fair, whom he had captivated, he never harboured one thought of proceeding beyond the limits of common gallantry, and carefully avoided all particular explanations. But, what above all other enjoyments yielded him the most agreeable entertainment; was the fecret history of characters, which he learned from a very extraordinary perfon, with whom he became acquainted in this manner.

Being at the houfe of a certain lady on a vifiting day, he was ftruck with the appearance of an old man, who no fooner entered the room than the miltrefs of the houfe very kindly defired one of the wits prefent to roaft the old put. This petit-maitre, proud of the employment, went up to the fenior, who had fomething extremely peculiar and fignificant in his countenance, and faluting him with divers fashionable conges, accosted him in these words : "Your fervant, you old rafcal. I hope to have the honour of feeing you hang'd. I vow to Gad ! you look extremely flocking, with thefe gummy eyes, lanthorn jaws, and toothlefs chaps. What ! you fquint at the ladies, you old rotten medlar ? Yes, yes, we underftand your ogling; but you must content yourfelf with a cookmaid, fink me! I fee you want to fit. Thefe wither'd fhanks of yours tremble under their burden; but you must have a little patience, old Hirco; indeed you must. I intend to mortify you a little longer, curfe me !"

The company was fo tickled with this addrefs, which was delivered with much grimace and gefticulation, that they burft out into a loud fit of laughter, which they fathered upon a monkey that was chained in the room; and, when the peal was over, the wit renewed his attack in these words: " I suppose you are fool enough to think this mirth was occafioned by Pug: Ay, there he is; you had best furvey him; he is of your own family, fwitch me: But the laugh was at your expence; and you ought to thank Heaven for making you fo ridiculous." While he uttered thefe ingenious ejaculations, the old genfleman bowed alternately to him and the monkey, that feemed to grin and chatter in imitation of the beau, and, with an arch folemnity of vifage, pronounced, "Gen-Vol. II. Cc tlemen, as I have not the honour to underftand your compliments, they will be much better beftowed on each other." So faying, he feated himfelf, and had the fatisfaction to fee the laugh returned upon the aggreffor, who remained confounded and abafhed, and in a few minutes left the room, muttering, as he retired, "the old fellow grows feurrilous, ftap my breath."

While Peregrine wondered in filence at this extraordinary fcene, the lady of the houfe perceiving his furprife, gave him to underftand, that the ancient vifitant was utterly bereft of the fenfe of hearing; that his name was Cadwallader Crabtree; his difpolition altogether mifanthropical; and that he was admitted into company on account of entertainment he afforded by his farcaftic obfervations, and the pleafant miftakes to which he was fubject from his infirmity. Nor did our hero wait a long time for an illuftration of this odd character. Every fentence he fpoke was replete with gall; nor did his fatire confift in general reflections, but in a feries of remarks, which had been made through the medium of a moft whimfical peculiarity of opinion.

Among those who were prefent at this affembly was a young officer, who having, by dint of interest, obtained a feat in the lower house, thought it incumbent upon him to talk of affairs of state; and accordingly regaled the company with an account of a fecret expedition which the French were busied in preparing; affuring them, that he had it from the mouth of the minister, to whom it had been transmitted by one of his agents abroad. In defcanting upon the particulars of the armament, he observed, that they had twenty so the line ready manned and victualled at Breft, which were defined for Toulon, where they would be joined by as many more; and from thence proceed to the execution of their feheme, which he imparted as a fecret not fit to be divulged.

This piece of intelligence being communicated to all the company except Mr. Crabtree, who fuffered by his lofs of hearing, that cynic was foon after accofted by a lady, who, by means of an artificial alphabet, formed by a certain conjunction and disposition of the fingers, asked if he had heard any extraordinary news of late? Cadwallader, with his usual complaifance, replied, that he fuppofed fhe took him for a courier or fpy, by teafing him eternally with that queftion. He then expatiated upon the foolifh curiofity of mankind, which, he faid, muft either proceed from idlenefs or want of ideas; and repeated almost verbatim the officer's information, a vague ridiculous report invented by fome ignorant coxcomb, who wanted to give himself airs of importance, and believed only by those who were utterly unacquainted with the politics and ftrength of the French nation.

In confirmation of what he had advanced, he endeavoured to demonstrate how impossible it must be for that people to fit out even the third part of fuch a navy, fo foon after the losses they had fustained during the war; and confirmed his proof by afferting, that to his certain knowledge, the harbours of Brest and Toulon could not at that time produce a squadron of eight ships of the line.

The member, who was an utter ftranger to this mifanthrope, hearing his own affeverations treated with fuch contempt, glowed with confusion and refentment, and raifing his voice, began to defend his own veracity, with great eagerness and trepidation, mingling with his arguments many bluftering invectives against the infolence and ill-manners of his supposed contradictor, who fat with the most mortifying composure of countenance, till the officer's patience was quite exhausted; and then, to the manifest increase of his vexation, he was informed, that his antagonist was so deas, that in all probability, the last trumpet would make no impression upon him, without a previous renovation of his organs.

CHAPTER LXXII.

He cultivates an acquaintance with the mifanthrope, who favours him with a fhort fketch of his own hiftory.

PEREGRINE was extremely well pleafed with this occafional rebuke, which occurred to feafonably, that he could fcarce believe it accidental. He looked upon C.dwallader as the greateft curiofity he had ever known, and cul-C c ij tivated the old man's acquaintance with fuch infinuating addrefs, that in lefs than a fortnight he obtained his confidence. As they one day walked into the fields together, the manhater difclofed himfelf in thefe words : " Though the term of our communication has been but fhort, you must have perceived, that I treat you with uncommon marks of regard; which, I affure you, is not owing to your perfonal accomplifhments, nor the pains you take to oblige me; for the first I overlook, and the last I fee through : But there is fomething in your difpolition which indicates a rooted contempt for the world, and I understand you have made fome fuccefsful efforts in expoling one part of it to the ridicule of the other. It is upon this affurance that I offer you my advice and affiftance, in profecuting other fchemes of the fame nature; and to convince you that fuch an alliance is not to be rejected, I will now give you a fhort sketch of my history, which will be published after my death, in forty-feven volumes of my own compiling.

I was born about forty miles from this place, of parents, who, having a very old family name to fupport, bestowed their whole fortune on my elder brother; fo that I inherited of my father little elfe than a large fhare of choler, to which I am indebted for a great many adventures that did not always end to my fatisfaction. At the age of eighteen I was fent up to town, with a recommendation to a certain peer, who found means to amufe me with the promife of a commission for feven whole years; and 'tis odds but I should have made my fortune by my perfeverance, had not I been arrefted, and thrown into the Marshalfea by my landlord, on whose credit I had fublifted three years, after my father had renounced me as an idle vagabond : There I remained fix months, among those prifoners who have no other fupport than chance charity; and contracted a very valuable acquaintance, which was of great fervice to me in the future emergencies of my life.

I was no fooner difcharged, in confequence of an act of parliament for the relief of infolvent debtors, than I went to the houfe of my creditor, whom I cudgelled without mercy; and, that I might leave nothing undone of those things which I ought to have done, my next flage was to Weftminster-hall, where I waited until my patron came forth from the house, and faluted him with a blow that laid him fenfelefs on the pavement: But my retreat was not fo fortunate as I could have wifhed : The chairmen and lacqueys in waiting having furrounded and difarmed me in a trice, I was committed to Newgate, and loaded with chains; and a very fagacious gentleman, who was afterwards hanged, having fat in judgment upon my cafe, pronounced me guilty of a capital crime, and foretold my condemnation at the Old Bailey. His prognoftic, however, was difappointed; for nobody appearing to profecute me at the next feffions, I was difcharged by order of the court. It would be impoffible for me to recount, in the compass of one day's conversation, all the particular exploits of which I bore confiderable fhare : Suffice it to fay, I have been, at different times, prifoner in all the jails within the bills of mortality. I have broke from every round-houfe on this fide Temple-Bar. No bailiff, in the days of my youth and defperation, durft execute a writ upon me without a dozen of followers; and the juffices themfelves trembled when I was brought before them.

I was once maimed by a carman, with whom I quarrelled, becaufe he ridiculed my leek on St. David's day; my skull was fractured by a butcher's cleaver on the like occasion. I have been run through the body five times, and loft the tip of my left ear by a piftol bullet. In a rencounter of this kind, having left my antagonist for dead, I was wife enough to make my retreat into France; and a few days after my arrival at Paris, entering into conversation with some officers on the subject of politics, a difpute arofe, in which I loft my temper, and fpoke fo irreverently of the Grand Monarque, that next morning I was fent to the Bastile, by virtue of a lettre de cachet. There I remained for fome months, deprived of all intercourfe with rational creatures; a circumstance for which I was not forry, as I had the more time to project fchemes of revenge against the tyrant who confined me, and the wretch who had betrayed my private conversation : But tired, at length, with these fruitless fuggestions, I was fain to unbend the feverity of my thoughts by a correspondence Cciit with fome induftrious fpiders, who had hung my dungeon with their ingenious labours.

I confidered their work with fuch attention, that I foon became an adept in the mystery of weaving, and furnished myfelf with as many uleful obfervations and reflections on that art, as will compose a very curious treatife, which I intend to bequeath to the Royal Society, for the benefit of our woollen manufacture; and this with a view to perpetuate my own name, rather than befriend my country: For, thank Heaven ! I am weaned from all attachments of that kind, and look upon myfelf as one very little obliged to any fociety whatfoever. Although I prefided with abfolute power over this long-legged community, and diftributed rewards and punifhments to each, according to his deferts, I grew impatient of my fituation; and my natural disposition, one day, prevailing, like a fire which had long been mothered, I wreaked the fury of my indignation upon my innocent fubjects, and in a twinkling deftroyed the whole race. While I was employed in this general maffacre, the turnkey, who brought me food, opened the door, and perceiving my transport, shrugged up his shoulders, and leaving my allowance, went out, pronouncing Le pauvre diable ! la tete lui tourne. My paffion no fooner fubfided than I refolved to profit by this opinion of the jailor, and from that day counterfeited lunacy with fuch fuccefs, that in lefs than three months I was delivered from the Baftile, and fent to the galleys, in which they thought my bodily vigour might be of fervice, although the faculties of my mind were decayed. Before I was chained to the oar, I received three hundred ftripes by way of welcome, that I might thereby be rendered more tractable, notwithftanding I used all the arguments in my power to perfuade them I was only mad north north-weft, and, when the wind was foutherly, knew a hawk from an hand-faw.

In our fecond cruife we had the good fortune to be overtaken by a tempeft, during which the flaves were unbound, that they might contribute the more to the prefervation of the galley, and have a chance for their lives, in cafe of fhipwreck. We were no fooner at liberty, than, making ourfelves mafters of the veffel, we robbed the officers, and ran her on fhore among rocks on the coaft of Portugal; from whence I haftened to Lifbon, with a view of obtaining my paflage in fome fhip bound for England, where, by this time, I hoped my affair was forgotten.

But, before this fcheme could be accomplifhed, my evil genius led me into company; and being intoxicated, I began to broach doctrines on the fubject of religion, at which fome of the party were fcandalized and incenfed; and I was next day dragged out of bed by the officers of the inquifition, and conveyed to a cell in the prifon belonging to that tribunal.

At my first examination, my refentment was strong enough to fupport me under the torture, which I endured without flinching; but my refolution abated, and my zeal immediately cooled, when I underftood from a fellow-prifoner, who groaned on the other fide of the partition, that in a fhort time there would be an auto da fe; in confequence of which I fhould, in all probability, be doomed to the flames, if I would not renounce my heretical errors, and fubmit to fuch penance as the church fhould think fit to prefcribe. This miferable wretch was convicted of Judaifm, which he had privately practifed by connivance for many years, until he had amaffed a fortune fufficient to attract the regard of the church. To this he fell a facrifice, and accordingly prepared himfelf for the stake; while I, not at all ambitious of the crown of martyrdom, refolved to temporize : So that, when I was brought to the queftion the fecond time, I made a folemn recantation. As I had no worldly fortune to obftruct my falvation, I was received into the bofom of the church, and, by way of penance, enjoined to walk barefoot to Rome in the habit of a pilgrim.

During my peregrination through Spain, I was detained ed as a fpy, until I could procure credentials from the inquifition at Lifbon; and behaved with fuch refolution and referve, that, after being releafed, I was deemed a proper perfon to be employed in quality of a fecret intelligencer at a certain court. This office I undertook without hefitation; and being furnifhed with money and bills of credit, croffed the Pyrenees, with intention to revenge myfelf upon the Spaniards for the feverities I had undergone during my captivity:

C c iiij

Having therefore effectually difguifed myfelf by a change of drefs, and a large patch on one eye, I hired an equipage, and appeared at Bologna in quality of an itinerant phyfician; in which capacity I fucceeded tolerably well, till my fervants decamped in the night with my baggage, and left me in the condition of Adam. In fhort, I have travelled over the greateft part of Europe, as a beggar, pilgrim, prieft, foldier, gamefter, and quack; and felt the extremes of indigence and opulence, with the inclemency of weather, in all its vicifiitudes. I have learned that the characters of mankind are every where the fame; that common fenfe and honefty bear an infinitely fmall proportion to folly and vice; and that life is at beft a paltry province.

After having fuffered innumerable hardfhips, dangers, and difgraces, I returned to London, where I lived fome years in a garret, and picked up a fubliftence, fuch as it was, by vending purges in the ftreets, from the back of a pied horfe; in which fituation I used to harangue the mob in broken English, under pretence of being an High German doctor.

At last an uncle died, by whom I inherit an estate of three hundred pounds per annum, though, in his lifetime, he would not have parted with a fixpence to fave my foul and body from perdition.

I now appear in the world, not as a member of any community, or what is called a focial creature, but merely as a fpectator, who entertains himfelf with the grimaces of a Jack-pudding, and banquets his fpleen in beholding his enemies at loggerheads. That I may enjoy this difpofition, abstracted from all interruption, danger, and participation, I feign myfelf deaf; an expedient by which I not only avoid all difputes and their confequences, but alfo become mafter of a thousand little fecrets, which are every day whilpered in my prefence, without any fulpicion of their being overheard. You faw how I handled that shallow politician at my Lady Plaufible's the other day. The fame method I practife upon the crazed tory, the bigot whig, the four fupercilious pedant, the petulant critic, the bluftering coward, the fawning tool, the pert pimp, fly fharper, and every other species of knaves and fools, with which this kingdom abounds.

In confequence of my rank and character, I obtain free admiffion to the ladies, among whom I have acquired the appellation of the Scandalous Chronicle. As I am confidered (while filent) in no other light than that of a footftool or elbow chair, they diveft their converfation of all reftraint before me, and gratify my fenfe of hearing with ftrange things, which (if I could prevail upon myfelf to give the world that fatisfaction) would compofe a curious piece of fecret hiftory, and exhibit a quite different idea of characters from what is commonly entertained.

By this time, young gentleman, you may perceive, that I have it in my power to be a valuable correspondent, and that it will be your interest to deferve my confidence."

Here the milanthrope left off fpeaking, defirous to know the fentiments of our hero, who embraced the proferred alliance in a transport of joy and furprife; and the treaty was no fooner concluded, than Mr. Crabtree began to perform articles, by imparting to him a thousand delicious fecrets, from the possession of which he promised himself innumerable scenes of mirth and enjoyment. By means of this affociate, whom he confidered as the ring of Gyges, he forefaw, that he should be enabled to penetrate, not only into the chambers, but even to the inmoss thoughts of the female fex. In order to ward off fuspicion, they agreed to revile each other in public, and meet at a certain private rendezvous, to communicate their mutual difcoveries, and concert their future operations.

In confequence of a letter from Lieutenant Hatchway, reprefenting the dangerous fituation of the commodore, Peregrine took a hafty leave of his friends, and departed immediately for the garrifon.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

Peregrine arrives at the garrifon, where he receives the laft admonitions of Commodore Trunnion, who next day refigns his breath, and is buried according to his own directions. Some gentlemen in the country make a fruitlefs attempt to accommodate matters betwixt Mr. Gamaliel Pickle and his eldeft fon.

ABOUT four o'clock in the morning our hero arrived at the garrifon, where he found his generous uncle in extremity, fupported in bed by Julia on one fide, and Lieutenant Hatchway on the other, while Mr. Jolter adminiftered fpiritual confolation to his foul; and between whiles comforted Mrs. Trunnion, who, with her maid, fat by the fire, weeping with great decorum; the phyfician having juft taken his laft fee, and retired, after pronouncing the fatal prognoftic, in which he anxioufly wifhed he might be miftaken.

Though the commodore's fpeech was interrupted by a violent hickup, he still retained the use of his fenfes; and, when Peregrine approached, ftretched out his hand with manifest figns of fatisfaction. The young gentleman, whofe heart overflowed with gratitude and affection, could not behold fuch a fpectacle unmoved. He endeavoured to conceal his tendernefs, which, in the wildnefs of his youth, and the pride of his disposition, he confidered as a derogation from his manhood; but, in fpite of all his endeavours, the tears gushed from his eyes, while he kiffed the old man's hand; and he was fo utterly difconcerted by his grief, that, when he attempted to fpeak, his tongue denied its office ;- fo that the commodore, perceiving his diforder, made a laft effort of ftrength, and confoled him in thefe words :-- " Swab the fpray from your bowfprit, my good lad, and coil up your fpirits. You mult not let the toplifts of your heart give way, becaufe you fee me ready to go down at thefe years : Many a better man has foundered before he has made half my way; thof I truft, by the mercy of God, I fhall be fure in port in a very few glaffes, and fast moored in a most bleffed riding; for my good friend Joster hath overhauled the journal of my fins, and, by the obfervation he hath taken of the ftate of my foul, I hope I shall happily conclude my voyage, and be brought up in the latitude of heaven. Here has been a doctor that wanted to flow me chockfull of phyfic; but, when a man's hour is come, what fignifies his taking his departure with a 'pothecary's flop in his hold. Those fellows come alongfide of dying nien, like the meffengers of the admiralty with failing orders; but I told him as how I could flip my cable without his direction or affiftance, and fo he hawled off in dudgeon. This curfed hickup makes fuch a rippling in the current of my fpeech, that mayhap you don't understand what I fay. Now, while the fucker of my wind-pump will go, I would willingly mention a few things, which I hope you will fet down in the log-book of your remembrance, when I am ftiff, d'ye fee. There's your aunt fitting whimpering by the fire, I defire you will keep her tight, warm, and eafy in her old age; fhe's an 'honeft heart in her own way, and, thof fhe goes a little crank and humourfome, by being often overftowed with Nantz and religion, the has been a faithful thipmate to me, and I dare fay never turned in with another man fince we first embarked in the fame bottom. Jack Hatchway, you know the trim of her as well as e'er a man in England, and I believe fhe has a kindnefs for you; whereby, if you two will grapple in the way of matrimony, when I am gone, I do fuppofe that my godfon, for love of me, will allow you to live in the garrifon all the days of your life."

Peregrine affured him, he would with pleafure comply with any requeft he fhould make in behalf of two perfons whom he efteemed fo much. The lieutenant, with a waggifh fneer, which even the gravity of the fituation could not prevent, thanked them both for their good-will, telling the commodore, he was obliged to him for his friendfhip, in feeking to promote him to the command of a veffel which he himfelf had wore out in the fervice; but that, notwithftanding, he fhould be content to take charge of her, though he could not help being fhy of coming after fuch an able navigator.

Trunnion, exhausted as he was, fmiled at this fally, and, after fome pause, refumed his admonitions in this manner:—" I need not talk of Pipes, because I know you'll do for him without any recommendation; the fellow has failed with me in many a hard gale, and I'll warrant him as stout a search as ever fet face to the weather: But I hope you'll take care of the rest of my crew, and not difrate them after I am dead, in favour of new followers. As for that young woman, Ned Gauntlet's daughter, I'm informed as how she's an excellent wench, and has a respect for you; whereby, if you run her on board in an unlawful way, I leave my curse upon you, and trust you will never prosper in the voyage of life: But I believe you are more of an honess man, than to behave for much like a pirate. I beg of all love you wool take care of your conflictution, and beware of running foul of harlots, who are no better than fo many mermaids, that fit upon rocks in the fea, and hang out a fair face for the destruction of passengers; thof I must fay, for my own part, I never met with any of those fweet fingers, and yet I have gone to fea for the fpace of thirty years. But howsomever, steer your course clear of all such brimstone bitches. Shun going to law, as you would fhun the devil; and look upon all attorneys as devouring fharks, or ravenous fish of prey. As foon as the breath is out of my body, let minute guns be fired, till I am fafe under ground. I would also be buried in the red jacket I had on when I boarded and took the Renummy. Let my pistols, cutlass, and pocket compass be laid in the coffin along with me. Let me be carried to the grave by my own men, rigged in the black caps and white fhirts which my barge's crew were wont to wear; and they must keep a good look-out, that none of your pilfering rafcallions may come and heave me up again, for the lucre of what they can get, until the carcafs is belayed by a tombftone. As for the motto, or what you call it, I leave that to you and Mr. Jolter, who are fcholars; but I do defire, that it may not be engraved in the Greek or Latin lingos, and much lefs in the French, which I abominate, but in plain English, that, when the angel comes to pipe all hands, at the great day, he may know that I am a British man, and speak to me in my mother tongue. And now I have no more to fay, but God in heaven have mercy upon my foul, and fend you all fair weather, wherefoever you are bound." So faying, he regarded every individual around him with a look of complacency, and, clofing his eye, compofed himfelf to reft, while the whole audience, Pipes himfelf not excepted, were melted with forrow; and Mrs. Trunnion confented to quit the room, that the might not be exposed to the unspeakable anguish of seeing him expire.

His laft moments, however, were not fo near as they imagined. He began to dofe, and enjoyed fmall intervals of eafe, till next day in the afternoon; during which remiffions, he was heard to pour forth many pious ejaculations, expreffing his hope, that, for all the heavy cargo of his fins, he fhould be able to furmount the puttockfhrouds of defpair, and get aloft to the crofs-trees of God's good favour. At laft his voice funk fo low as not to be diftinguished; and, having lain about an hour, almost without any perceptible figns of life, he gave up the ghost with a groan, which announced his decease.

Julia was no fooner certified of this melancholy event, than fhe ran to her aunt's chamber, weeping aloud; and immediately a very decent concert was performed by the good widow and her attendants. Peregrine and Hatchway retired till the corps fhould be laid out; and Pipes having furveyed the body, with a face of rueful attention, —" Well fare thy foul ! old Hawfer Trunnion (faid he): Man and boy I have known thee thefe five and thirty years, and fure a truer heart never broke bifcuit. Many a hard gale haft thou weathered; but now thy fpells are all over, and thy hull fairly laid up. A better commander I'd never defire to ferve; and who knows but I may help to fet up thy ftanding rigging in another world?"

All the fervants of the house were affected with the lofs of their old mafter; and the poor people in the neighbourhood affembled at the gate, and, by repeated howlings, expressed their forrow for the death of their charitable benefactor. Peregrine, though he felt every thing which love and gratitude could infpire on this occafion, was not fo much overwhelmed with affliction, as to be incapable of taking the management of the family into his own hands. He gave directions about the funeral with great difcretion, after having paid the compliments of condolence to his aunt, whom he confoled with the affurance of his inviolable efteem and affection. He ordered a fuit of mourning to be made for every perfon in the garrifon, and invited all the neighbouring gentlemen to the burial, not even excepting his father and brother Gam, who did not, however, honour the ceremony with their prefence; nor was his mother humane enough to visit her sister-in-law in her distrefs.

In the method of interment, the commodore's injunctions were obeyed to a tittle; and at the fame time our hero made a donation of fifty pounds to the poor of the parifh, as a benefaction which his uncle had forgot to bequeath. Having performed thefe obfequies with the moft pious punctuality, he examined the will, to which there was no addition fince it had been first executed, adjusted the payment of all the legacies, and, being fole executor, took an account of the estate to which he had fucceeded, which, after all deductions, amounted to thirty thousand pounds. The possession of fuch a fortune, of which he was absolute master, did not at all contribute to the humiliation of his spirit, but inspired him with new ideas of grandeur and magnificence, and elevated his hope to the highess primacle of expectation.

His domeftic affairs being fettled, he was visited by almost all the gentlemen of the country, who came to pay their compliments of congratulation on his acceffion to the eftate; and fome of them offered their good offices towards a reconciliation betwixt his father and him, induced by the general deteftation which was entertained for his brother Gam, who was by this time looked upon by his neighbours as a prodigy of infolence and malice. Our young fquire thanked them for their kind propofal, which he accepted; and old Gamaliel, at their entreaties, feemed very well difpofed to any accommodation; but, as he would not venture to declare himfelf before he had confulted his wife, his favourable disposition was rendered altogether ineffectual, by the inftigations of that implacable woman; and our hero refigned all expectation of being reunited to his father's houfe. His brother, as ufual, took all opportunities of injuring his character, by falfe afperfions, and stories misrepresented, in order to prejudice his reputation; nor was his fifter Julia fuffered to enjoy her good fortune in peace. Had he undergone fuch perfecution from an alien to his blood, the world would have heard of his revenge; but, notwithstanding his indignation, he was too much tinctured by the prejudiccs of confanguinity, to lift his arm in judgment against the fon of his own parents; and this confideration abridged the term of his refidence at the garrifon, where he had proposed to stay for some months.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

The young gentleman having fettled his domeftic affairs, arrives in London, and fets up a gay equipage. He meets with Emilia, and is introduced to her uncle.

His aunt, at the earnest folicitations of Julia and her hufband, took up her quarters at the houfe of that affectionate kinfwoman, who made it her chief fludy to comfort and cherifh the difconfolate widow; and lolter, in expectation of the living, which was not yet vacant, remained in garrifon, in quality of land-fteward upon our hero's country estate. As for the lieutenant, our young gentleman communed with him in a ferious manner, about the commodore's propofal of taking Mrs. Trunnion to wife; and Jack, being quite tired of the folitary fituation of a bachelor, which nothing but the company of his old commander could have enabled him to fupport fo long, far from difcovering averfion to the match, obferved, with an arch smile, that it was not the first time he had commanded a veffel in the abfence of 'Captain Trunnion; and therefore, if the widow was willing, he would cheerfully ftand by her helm, and, as he hoped the duty would not be of long continuance, do his endeavour to fteer her fafe into port, where the commodore might come on board, and take charge of her again.

In confequence of this declaration, it was determined that Mr. Hatchway fhould make his addreffes to Mrs. Trunnion as foon as decency would permit her to receive them; and Mr. Clover and his wife promifed to exert their influence in his behalf. Meanwhile Jack was defired to live at the caftle as ufual, and affured, that it fhould be put wholly in his poffeffion, as foon as he fhould be able to accomplifh this matrimonial fcheme.

When Peregrine had fettled all thefe points to his own fatisfaction, he took leave of all his friends, and, repairing to the great city, purchafed a new chariot and horfes, put Pipes and another lacquey into rich liveries, took elegant lodgings in Pall-Mall, and made a most remarkable appearance among the people of fashion. It was owing to this equipage, and the gaiety of his perfonal deportment, that common fame, which is always a common liar, reprefented him as a young gentleman who had just fucceeded to an eftate of five thousand pounds per annum, by the death of an uncle; that he was entitled to an equal fortune at the decease of his own father, exclusive of two confiderable jointures, which would devolve upon him at the demife of his mother and aunt. This report, falfe and ridiculous as it was, he could not find in his heart to contradict : Not but that he was forry to find himfelf fo mifreprefented; but his vanity would not allow him to take any ftep that might diminish his importance in the opinion of those who courted his acquaintance, on the supposition that his circumstances were actually as affluent as they were faid to be. Nay, fo much was he infatuated by this weaknefs, that he refolved to encourage the deception, by living up to the report; and accordingly engaged in the most expensive parties of pleafure, believing that, before his prefent finances fhould be exhausted, his fortune would be effectually made, by the perfonal accomplishments he should have occasion to difplay to the beau monde in the courfe of his extravagance. In a word, vanity and pride were the ruling foibles of our adventurer, who imagined himfelf fufficiently qualified to retrieve his fortune in various fhapes, long before he could have any idea of want or difficulty. He thought he fhould have it in his power, at any time, to make prize of a rich heirefs, or opulent widow; his ambition had already afpired to the heart of a young handfome duchefs dowager, to whofe acquaintance he had found means to be introduced; or, should matrimony chance to be unfuitable to his inclinations, he never doubted, that, by the interest he might acquire among the nobility, he fhould be favoured with fome lucrative post, that would amply recompense him for the liberality of his difpolition. There are many young men who entertain the fame expectations, with half the reafon he had to be fo prefumptuous.

In the midft of thefe chimerical calculations, his paffion for Emilia did not fubfide; but, on the contrary, began to rage with fuch an inflammation of defire, that her idea interfered with every other reflection, and abfolutely difabled him from profecuting the other lofty fchemes which his imagination had projected. He therefore laid down the honeft refolution of visiting her in all the fplendour of his fituation, in order to practife upon her virtue with all his art and addrefs, to the utmost extent of his influence and fortune. Nay, fo effectually had his guilty passion absorbed his principles of honour, confcience, humanity, and regard for the commodore's last words, that he was base enough to rejoice at the absence of his friend Godfrey, who, being then with his regiment in Ireland, could not dive into his purpose, or take measures for frustrating his vitious defign.

Fraught with these heroic fentiments, he determined to set out for Suffex in his chariot and fix, attended by his valet de chambre and two footmen; and as he was now fensible, that in his last effay he had mistaken his cue, he determined to change his battery, and fap the fortres, by the most submissive, fost, and infinuating behaviour.

On the evening that preceded this propofed expedition, he went into one of the boxes at the play house, as usual, to fhow himfelf to the ladies; and in reconnoitring the company through a glafs (for no other reafon, but becaufe it was fashionable to be purblind), perceived his mistrefs very plainly dreffed, in one of the feats above the stage, talking to another young woman of a very homely appearance. Though his heart beat the alarm with the utmost impatience at fight of his Emilia, he was for fome minutes deterred from obeying the impulse of his love, by the prefence of fome ladies of fashion, who, he feared, would think the worfe of him, fhould they fee him make his compliment in public to a perfon of her figure. Nor would the violence of his inclination have fo far prevailed over his pride, as to lead him thither, had not he recollected, that his quality friends would look upon her as fome handfome Abigail, with whom he had an affair of gallantry, and of confequence give him credit for the intrigue.

Encouraged by this fuggeftion, he complied with the dictates of love, and flew to the place where his charmer fat. His air and drefs were fo remarkable, that it was almost impossible he should have escaped the eyes of a curious observer, especially as he had chosen a time for coming in, when his entrance could not fail to attract the  $V_{cl}$ . II, D d notice of the fpectators; I mean, when the whole house was hutled in attention to the performance on the ftage. Emilia, therefore, perceived him at his first approach; the found herfelf discovered by the direction of his glafs, and, gucifing his intention by his abrupt retreat from the box, fummoned all her fortitude to her aid, and prepared for his reception. He advanced to her with an air of eagernels and joy, tempered with modefty and refpect, and expressed his fatisfaction at feeing her, with a feeming reverence of regard. Though the was extremely well pleafed at this unexpected behaviour, fhe fupprefied the emotions of her heart, and answered his compliments with affected eafe and unconcern, fuch as might denote the good humour of a perfon who meets by accident with an indifferent acquaintance. After having certified himfelf of her own good health, he very kindly inquired about her mother and Mifs Sophy, gave her to underftand that he had lately been favoured with a letter from Godfrey; that he had actually intended to fet out next morning on a visit to Mrs. Gauntlet, which (now that he was fo happy as to meet with her) he would postpone, until he should have the plcafure of attending her to the country. After having thanked him for his polite intention, fhe told him, that her mother was expected in town in a few days, and that the herfelf had come to London fome weeks ago, to give her attendance upon her aunt, who had been dangeroufly ill, but was now pretty well recovered.

Although the conversation of course turned upon general topics, during the entertainment he took all opportunities of being particular with his eyes, through which he conveyed a thousand tender protestations. She faw and inwardly rejoiced at the humility of his looks; but, far from rewarding it with one approving glance, the industrious avoided this ocular intercourse, and rather coquetted with a young gentleman that ogled her from the opposite box. Peregrine's penetration easily detected her fentiments, and he was nettled at her diffimulation, which ferved to confirm him in his unwarrantable defigns upon her perform. He perfisted in his affiduities with indefatigable perfeverance; when the play was concluded, handed her and her companion into an hackney-coach, and with difficulty was permitted to efcort them to the houfe of Emilia's uncle, to whom our hero was introduced by the young lady, as an intimate friend of her brother Godfrey.

The old gentleman, who was no ftranger to the nature of Peregrine's connection with his fifter's family, prevailed upon him to ftay fupper, and feemed particularly well pleafed with his converfation and deportment, which, by the help of his natural fagacity, he wonderfully adapted to the humour of his entertainer. After fupper, when the ladies were withdrawn, and the citizen called for his pipe, our fly adventurer followed his example. Though he abhorred the plant, he fmoked with an air of infinite fatisfaction, and expatiated upon the virtues of tobacco, as if he had been deeply concerned in the Virginia trade. In the progrefs of the difcourfe, he confulted the merchant's difposition; and the national debt coming upon the carpet, held forth upon the funds like a profeffed broker. When the alderman complained of the reftrictions and difcouragements of trade, his guest inveighed against exorbitant duties, with the nature of which he feemed as well acquainted as any commissioner of the customs; fo that the uncle was aftonished at the extent of his knowledge, and expressed his furprise, that a gay young gentleman like him fhould have found either leifure or inclination to confider fubjects fo foreign to the fashionable ainufements of youth.

Pickle laid hold on this opportunity to tell him, that he was defcended from a race of merchants; and that, early in life, he had made it his bufinefs to inftruct himfelf in the different branches of trade, which he not only ftudied as his family profeffion, but alfo as the fource of all our national riches and power. He then launched out in praife of commerce, and the promoters thereof; and, by way of contraft, employed all his ridicule in drawing fuch ludicrous pictures of the manners and education of what is called high life, that the trader's fides were fhaken by laughter, even to the danger of his life; and he looked upon our adventurer as a miracle of fobriety and good fenfe.

Having thus ingratiated himfelf with the uncle, Peregrine took his leave, and next day in the forenoon vifited the niece in his chariot, after fhe had been admonifhed by her kinfman to behave with circumfpection, and cautioned againft neglecting or difcouraging the addreffes of fuch a valuable admirer.

CHAPTER LXXV.

He profecutes his defign upon Emilia with great art and perfeverance.

Our adventurer, having by his hypocrify obtained free accels to his miftrefs, began the fiege, by profeffing the most fincere contrition for his former levity, and imploring her forgivenefs with fuch earneft fupplication, that, guarded as the was against his flattering arts, flie began to believe his protestations, which were even accompanied with tears, and abated a good deal of that feverity and diftance the had propofed to maintain during this interview. She would not, however, favour him with the least acknowledgment of a mutual paffion, becaufe, in the midft of his vows of eternal conftancy and truth, he did nor mention one fyllable of wedlock, though he was now entirely mafter of his own conduct; and this confideration created a doubt, which fortified her against all his attacks : Yet, what her diferetion would have concealed, was difcovered by her eyes, which, in fpite of all her endeavours, breathed forth complacency and love. For her inclination was flattered by her own felf-fufficiency, which imputed her admirer's filence in that particular to the hurry and perturbation of his fpirits, and perfuaded her, that he could not poffibly regard her with any other than honourable intentions.

The infidious lover exulted in the tendernefs of her looks, from which he prefaged a complete victory; but, that he might not overfhoot himfelf by his own precipitation, he would not run the rifk of declaring himfelf, until her heart fhould be fo far entangled within his fnares, as that neither the fuggeftions of honour, prudence, or pride, fhould be able to difengage it. Armed with this refolution, he reftrained the impatience of his temper within the limits of the most delicate deportment. After having folicited and obtained permiffion to attend her to the next opera, he took her by the hand, and preffing it to his lips in the moft refpectful manner, went away, leaving her in a moft whimfical ftate of fufpenfe, chequered with an intereffing vicifitude of hope and fear.

On the appointed day, he appeared again about five o'clock in the afternoon, and found her native charms fo much improved by the advantages of drefs, that he was transported with admiration and delight; and, while he conducted her to the Hay-Market, could fcarce bridle the impetuosity of his passion, fo as to observe the forbearing maxims he had adopted. When the entered the pit, he had abundance of food for the gratification of his vanity; for, in a moment, the eclipted all the female part of the audience, each individual allowing in her own heart, that the ftranger was by far the handsomest woman there prefent, except herfelf.

Here it was that our hero enjoyed a double triumph; he was vain of this opportunity to enhance his reputation for gallantry among the ladies of fashion who knew him, and proud of an occasion to display his quality acquaintance to Emilia, that the might entertain the greater idea of the conquest the had made, and pay the more deference to his importance in the fequel of his address. That he might profit as much as possible by this fituation, he went up and accossed every perfon in the pit, with whom he ever had the least communication, whispered and laughed with an affected air of familiarity, and even bowed at a distance to fome of the nobility, on the flender foundation of having stood near them at court, or prefented them with a pinch of rapee at White's chocolate house.

This ridiculous oftentation, though now practifed with a view of promoting his defign, was a weaknefs, that, in fome degree, infected the whole of his behaviour; for nothing gave him fo much joy in converfation, as an opportunity of giving the company to understand how well he was with perfons of diftinguished rank and character: He would often (for example) observe, as it were occafionally, that the Duke of G— was one of the best natured men in the world, and illustrate this affertion by fome inftance of his affability, in which he himfelf was D d iij concerned: Then, by an abrupt transition, he would repeat fome repartee of Lady T____, and mention a certain bon mot of the Earl of C_____, which was uttered in his hearing.

Abundance of young men, in this manner, make free with the names, though they have never had accefs to the perfons of the nobility; but this was not the cafe with Peregrine, who, in confideration of his appearance and fuppofed fortune, together with the advantage of his introduction, was by this time freely admitted to the tables of the great.

In his return with Emilia from the opera, though he ftill maintained the moft fcrupulous decorum in his behaviour, he plied her with the moft paffionate expressions of love, fqueezed her hand with great fervency, protefted that his whole foul was engrosfied by her idea, and that he could not exist independent of her favour. Pleafed as the was with his warm and pathetic address, together with the respectful manner of his making love, the yet had prudence and resolution fufficient to contain her tenderness, which was ready to run over; being fortified against his arts, by reflecting, that, if his aim was honourable, it was now his business to declare it. On this confideration the refused to make any ferious reply to his earness exposituations, but affected to receive them as the undetermined effusions of gallantry and good breeding.

This fictitious gaiety and good humour, though it baffled his hope of extorting from her an acknowledgment of which he might have taken immediate advantage, neverthelefs encouraged him to obferve (as the chariot paffed along the Strand), that the night was far advanced; that fupper would certainly be over before they could reach her uncle's houfe; and to propofe, that he fhould wait upon her to fome place, where they might be accommodated with a flight refreshment. She was offended at the freedom of this propofal, which, however, fhe treated as a joke, thanking him for his courteous offer, and affuring him, that when she should be disposed for a tavern treat, he alone should have the honour of bestowing it.

Her kinfman being engaged with company abroad, and her aunt retired to reft, he had the good fortune to enjoy z tele-a-tete with her during a whole hour, which he employed with fuch confummate skill, that her caution was almost overcome. He not only affailed her with the artillery of fighs, vows, prayers, and tears, but even pawned his honour in behalf of his love. He fwore with many imprecations, that although her heart was furrendered to him at diferentian, there was a principle within him, which would never allow him to injure fuch innocence and beauty; and the transports of his passion had, upon this occasion, fo far overshot his purpose, that if she had demanded an explanation while he was thus agitated, he would have engaged himfelf to her wifh by fuch ties as he could not break with any regard to his reputation. But from fuch expostulation the was deterred, partly by pride, and partly by the dread of finding herfelf miftaken in fuch an interefting conjecture. She therefore enjoyed the prefent flattering appearance of her fate, was prevailed upon to accept the jewels, which he purchased with part of his winning at Bath, and, with the most inchanting condefcention, fubmitted to a warm embrace when he took his leave, after having obtained permiffion to vifit her as often as his inclination and convenience would permit.

In his return to his own lodgings, he was buoyed up with his fuccefs to an extravagance of hope, already congratulated himfelf upon his triumph over Emilia's virtue, and began to project future conquefts among the moft dignified characters of the female fex. But his attention was not at all diffipated by thefe vain reflections; he refolved to concentrate the whole exertion of his foul upon the execution of his prefent plan, defifted, in the mean time, from all other tchemes of pleafure, interest, and ambition, and took lodgings in the city, for the more commodious accomplifhment of his purpofe.

While our lover's imagination was thus agreeably regaled, his miftrefs did not enjoy her expectations without the intervention of doubts and anxiety. His filence touching the final aim of his addreffes, was a myftery on which fhe was afraid of exercifing her fagacity; and her uncle tormented her with inquiries into the circumftances of Peregrine's profeffions and deportment. Rather than give this relation the leaft caufe of fufpicion, which muft have cut off all intercourfe betwixt her and her admirer, D d iiij the faid every thing which the thought would fatisfy his care and concern for her welfare; and, in confequence of fuch reprefentation, the enjoyed, without referve, the company of our adventurer, who profecuted his plan with furprifing eagernels and perfeverance.

CHAPTER LXXVI.

He prevails upon Emilia to accompany him to a mafquerade, makes a treacherous attempt upon her affection, and meets with a deferved repulfe.

SCARCE a night elapfed in which he did not conduct her to fome public entertainment. When, by the dint of his infidious carriage, he thought himfelf in full poffeffion of her confidence and affection, he lay in wait for an opportunity; and hearing her observe in conversation, that the had never been at a malquerade, begged leave to attend her to the next ball; at the fame time extending his invitation to the young lady in whole company he had found her at the play, fhe being prefent when this fubject of discourse was introduced. He had flattered himself, that this gentlewoman would decline the propofal, as the was a perfon feemingly of a demure difpolition, who had been born and bred in the city, where fuch diversions are looked upon as scenes of lewdness and debauchery. For once, however, he reckoned without his hoft; curiofity is as prevalent in the city as at the court end of the town : Emilia no fooner fignified her affent to his propofal, than her friend, with an air of fatisfaction, agreed to make one of the party; and he was obliged to thank her for that complaifance which laid him under infinite mortification. He fet his genius at work to invent fome fcheme for preventing her unfeafonable intrufion. Had an opportunity offered, he would have acted as her phyfician, and administered a medicine that would have laid her under the neceffity of flaying at home : But his acquaintance with her being too flight to furnish him with the means of executing this expedient, he devifed another, which was practifed with all imaginable fuccefs. Understanding that her grandmother had left her a fum of money independent of her parents, he conveyed a letter to her mother, intimating, that her daughter, on pretence of going to the mafquerade, intended to beftow herfelf in marriage to a certain perion, and that in a few days fhe would be informed of the circumftances of the whole intrigue, provided fhe would keep this information fecret, and contrive fome excufe for detaining the young lady at home, without giving her caufe to believe fhe was apprifed of her intention. This billet, fubscribed, Your well-wisher, and unknown humble fervant, had the defired effect upon the careful matron, who, on the ball-day, feigned herfelf fo extremely ill, that Mifs could not with any decency quit her mamma's apartment; and therefore fent her apology to Emilia in the afternoon, immediately after the arrival of Peregrine, who pretended to be very much afflicted with the difappointment, while his heart throbbed with a transport of joy.

About ten o'clock the lovers fet out for the Hay-Market, he being dreffed in the habit of Pantaloon, and fhe in that of Columbine; and they had fcarce entered the house when the music struck up, the curtain was withdrawn, and the whole fcene difplayed at once, to the admiration of Emilia, whole expectation was infinitely furpaffed by this exhibition. Our gallant having conducted her through all the different apartments, and defcribed the economy of the place, led her into the circle, and, in their turn, they danced feveral minuets; then going to the fide-board, he prevailed upon her to eat fome fweetmeats and drink a glafs of Champaign. After a fecond review of the company, they engaged in country-dances, at which exercise they continued, until our adventurer concluded that his partner's blood was fufficiently warmed for the profecution of his defign. On this fuppofition, which was built upon her declaring that fhe was thirfty and fatigued, he perfuaded her to take a little refreshment and repose; and, for that purpose, handed her down stairs into the eating-room, where, having feated her on the floor, he prefented her with a glass of wine and water; and, as the complained of being faint, enriched the draught with fome drops of a certain elixir, which he recommended as a most excellent restorative, though it was no other than a ftimulating tincture, which he had treacheroufly provided for the occafion. Having fwallowed this potion, by which her fpirits were manifeltly exhilerated, the ate a flice of ham, with the wing of a cold pullet, and concluded the meal with a glafs of Burgundy, which the drank at the earneft entreaty of her admirer. Thefe extraordinary cordials co-operating with the ferment of her blood, which was heated by violent motion, could not fail to affect the conflictution of a delicate young creature, who was naturally fprightly and volatile. Her eyes began to fparkle with unufual fire and vivacity, a thoufand brilliant fallies of wit efcaped her, and every mark that accofted her underwent fome fmarting repartee.

Peregrine, overjoyed at the fuccefs of his administration, proposed that they should refume their places at the country dances, with a view to promote and affiss the efficacy of his elixir; and, when he thought her disposition was properly adapted for the theme, began to ply her with all the elocution of love. In order to elevate his own spirits to that pitch of resolution which his fehrme required, he drank two whole bottles of Burgundy, which inflamed his passion to fuch a degree, that he found himself capable of undertaking and perpetrating any scheme for the gratification of his defire.

Emilia, warmed by fo many concurring incentives, in favour of the man she loved, abated confiderably of her wonted referve, liftened to his protestations with undiffembled pleafure, and, in the confidence of her fatisfaction, even owned him absolute master of her affections. Ravished with this confession, he now deemed himself on the brink of reaping the delicious fruits of his art and affiduity; and the morning being already pretty far advanced, affented with rapture to the first propofal she made of retiring to her lodgings. The blinds of the chariot being pulled up, he took advantage of the favourable fituation of her thoughts; and, on pretence of being whimfical, in confequence of the wine he had fwallowed, clafped her in his arms, and imprinted a thoufand kiffes on her pouting lips, a freedom which fhe pardoned as the privilege of intoxication. While he thus indulged himfelf with impunity, the carriage halted, and Pipes opening the door, his mafter handed her into the paffage, before fhe perceived that it was not her uncle's house at which they had alighted.

Alarmed at this difcovery, fhe, with fome confufion, defired to know his reafon for conducting her to a ftrange place at thefe hours: But he made no reply, until he had led her into an apartment, when he gave her to underftand, that, as her uncle's family muft be difturbed by her going thither fo late in the night, and the ftreets near Temple-Bar were infefted by a multitude of robbers and cut-throats, he had ordered his coachman to halt at this houfe, which was kept by a relation of his, a mighty good fort of a gentlewoman, who would be proud of an opportunity to accommodate a perfon for whom he was known to entertain fuch tendernefs and efteem.

Emilia had too much penetration to be imposed upon by this plaufible pretext : In fpite of her partiality for Peregrine, which had never been inflamed to fuch a pitch of complacency before, fhe comprehended his whole plan in a twinkling. Though her blood boiled with indiguation, fhe thanked him with an affected air of ferenity for his kind concern, and expressed her obligation to his coufin; but, at the fame time, infifted upon going home, left her abfence fhould terrify her uncle and aunt, who, fhe knew, would not retire to reft till her return.

He urged her, with a thousand remonstrances, to confult her own eafe and fafety, promifing to fend Pipes into the city, for the fatisfaction of her relations : But, finding her obstinately deaf to his entreaties, he affured her, that he would, in a few minutes, comply with her requeft; and, in the mean time, begged fhe would fortify herfelf against the cold with a cordial, which he poured out in her prefence, and which (now that her fufpicion was aroused) she refused to taste, notwithstanding all his importunities. He then fell on his knees before her, and the tears gushing from his eyes, fwore that his passion was wound up to fuch a pitch of impatience, that he could no longer live upon the unfubstantial food of expectation; and that, if the would not vouchfafe to crown his happinefs, he would forthwith facrifice himfelf to her difdain. Such an abrupt addrefs, accompanied with all the fymptoms of frantic agitation, could not fail to perplex and affright the gentle Emilia, who, after fome recollection, replied with a refolute tone, that fhe could not fee what reason he had to complain of her referve, which she was not at liberty to lay entirely alide, until he should have avowed his intentions in form, and obtained the fanction of those whom it was her duty to obey. " Divine creature ! (cried he, feizing her hand, and preffing it to his lips), it is from you alone I hope for that condefcention, which would overwhelm me with transports of celeftial The fentiments of parents are fordid, filly, and blifs. confined : Mean not then to fubject my paffion to fuch low reftrictions as were calculated for the purposes of common life. My love is too delicate and refined to wear those vulgar fetters, which ferve only to deftroy the merit of voluntary affection, and to upbraid a man inceffantly with the articles of compulsion, under which he lies. My dear angel! fpare me the mortification of being compelled to love you, and reign fole emprefs of my heart and fortune. I will not affront you fo much as to talk of fettlements; my all is at your difpofal. In this pocket-book are notes to the amount of two thousand pounds; do me the pleafure to accept of them; to-morrow I will lay ten thousand more in your lap. In a word, you shall be mistrefs of my whole eftate, and I shall think myfelf happy in living dependent on your bounty !"

Heavens! what were the emotions of the virtuous, the fenfible, the delicate, the tender Emilia's heart, when fhe heard this infolent declaration from the mouth of a man whom fhe had honoured with her affection and efteem ! It was not fimply horror, grief, or indignation, that fhe felt, in confequence of this unworthy treatment, but the united pangs of all together, which produced a fort of hyfteric laugh, while fhe told him that fhe could not help admiring his generofity.

Deceived by this convultion, and the ironical compliment that attended it, the lover thought he had already made great progrefs in his operations, and that it was now his butinefs to ftorm the fort by a vigorous affault, that he might fpare her the confusion of yielding without refiftance. Posseffed by this vain fuggestion, he ftarted up, and, folding her in his arms, began to obey the furious dictates of his unruly and ungenerous defire. With an air of cool determination, the demanded a parley; and when, upon her repeated request, he granted it, addreffed herfelf to him in these words, while her eyes gleamed with all the dignity of the most awful refentment. "Sir, I fcorn to upbraid you with a repetition of your former vows and protestations, nor will I recapitulate the little arts you have practifed to enfnare my heart ; becaufe, though by dint of the most perfidious diffimulation you have found means to deceive my opinion, your utmoft efforts have never been able to lull the vigilance of my conduct, or to engage my affection beyond the power of difearding you without a tear, whenever my honour fhould demand fuch a facrifice. Sir, you are unworthy of my concern or regret, and the figh that now struggles from my breaft is the refult of forrow, for my own want of discernment. As for your present attempt upon my chaftity, I despife your power, as I detest your intention. Though, under the mafk of the most delicate refpect, you have decoyed me from the immediate protection of my friends, and contrived other impious ftratagems to ruin my peace and reputation, I confide too much in my own innocence, and the authority of the law, to admit one thought of fear, much lefs to fink under the horror of this fnocking fituation, into which I have been feduced. Sir, your behaviour on this occasion is, in all respects, low and contemptible : For, ruffian as you are, you durft not harbour the thought of executing your exectable fcheme, while you knew my brother was near enough to prevent or revenge the infult; fo that you must not only be a treacherous villain, but alfo a most despicable coward." Having expressed herself in this manner, with a most majeftic feverity of afpect, fhe opened the door, and, walking down ftairs with furprifing refolution, committed herfelf to the care of a watchman, who accommodated her with a hackney chair, in which fhe was fafely conveyed to her uncle's house.

Meanwhile, the lover was fo confounded and overawed by thefe cutting reproaches, and her animated behaviour, that all his refolution forfook him, and he found himfelf not only incapable of obftructing her retreat, but even of uttering one fyllable to deprecate her wrath, or extenuate the guilt of his own conduct. The nature of his difappointment, and the keen remorfe that feized him, when he reflected upon the difhonourable footing on which his character flood with Emilia, raifed fuch per-turbation in his mind, that his filence was fucceeded by a violent fit of distraction, during which he raved like a bedlamite, and acted a thousand extravagancies, which convinced the people of the houfe (a certain bagnio), that he had actually loft his wits. Pipes, with great concern, adopted the fame opinion; and, being affifted by the waiters, hindered him, by main force, from running out and pursuing the fair fugitive, whom, in his delirium, he alternately curfed and commended, with horrid imprecations and lavish applause. His faithful valet, having waited two whole hours, in hopes of feeing this guft of paffion overblown, and perceiving that the paroxyim feemed rather to increase, very prudently fent for a physician of his mafter's acquaintance, who, having confidered the circumftances and fymptoins of the diforder, directed that he should be plentifully blooded, without loss of time, and prefcribed a draught to compose the tumult of his fpirits. These orders being punctually performed, he grew more calm and tractable, recovered his reflection to far as to be alhamed of the ecltafy he had undergone, fuffered himfelf quietly to be undreffed and put to bed, where the fatigue, occafioned by his exercife at the mafquerade, co-operated with the prefent diffipation of his fpirits to lull him into a profound fleep, which greatly tended to the prefervation of his intellects : Not that he found himfelf in a state of perfect tranquillity when he waked about noon. The remembrance of what had paffed overwhelmed him with mortification. Emilia's invectives still founded in his ears : And, while he deeply refented her difdain, he could not help admiring her spirit, and his heart did homage to her charms.

CHAPTER LXXVII.

He endeavours to reconcile himfelf to his miftrefs, and exposlulates with the uncle, who forbids him the house.

In this ftate of division, he went home to his own lodgings in a chair; and while he deliberated with himfelf whether he should relinquish the pursuit, and endeavour to banish her idea from his breast, or go immediately and humble himfelf before his exafperated miftrefs, and offer his hand as an atonement for his crime, his fervant put in his hand a packet, which had been delivered by a ticket-porter at the door. He no fooner perceived that the fuperfcription was in Emilia's hand-writing, than he gueffed the nature of the contents; and opening the feal with difordered eagernefs, found the jewels he had given to her, enclofed in a billet, couched in thefe words.

" THAT I may have no caufe to reproach myfelf with having retained the leaft memorial of a wretch whom I equally defpife and abhor, I take this opportunity of reftoring thefe ineffectual inftruments of his infamous defign upon the honour of EMILIA."

His chagrin was fo much galled and inflamed at the bitternefs of this contemptuous meffage, that he gnawed his fingers till the blood ran over his nails, and even wept with vexation. Sometimes he vowed revenge againft her haughty virtue, and reviled himfelf for his precipitate declaration, before his fcheme was brought to maturity; then he would confider her behaviour with reverence and regard, and bow before the irrefiftible power of her attractions. In fhort, his breaft was torn by conflicting paffions; love, fhame, and remorfe, contended with vanity, ambition, and revenge; and the fuperiority was ftill doubtful, when headftrong defire interpofed, and decided in favour of an attempt towards a reconciliation with the offended fair.

Impelled by this motive, he fet out in the afternoon for the houfe of her uncle, not without hopes of that tender enjoyment, which never fails to attend an accommodation betwixt two lovers of tafte and fenfibility. Though the confcioufnefs of his trefpafs encumbered him with an air of awkward confufion, he was too confident of his own qualifications and addrefs to defpair of forgivenefs; and, by that time he arrived at the citizen's gate, he had conned a very artful and pathetic harangue, which he propofed to utter in his own behalf, laying the blame of his conduct on the impetuofity of his paffion, increafed by the Burgundy, which he had too liberally drank : But he did not meet with an opportunity to avail himfelf of this preparation. Emilia, fulpecting that he would take fome itep of this kind to retrieve her favour, had gone abroad on pretence of vifiting, after having fignified to her kinfman her refolution to avoid the company of Peregrine, on account of fome ambiguities which (fhe faid) were laft night remarkable in his demeanour, at the mafquerade. She chofe to infinuate her fufpicion in thefe hints, rather than give an explicit detail of the young man's difhonourable contrivance, which might have kindled the refentment of the family to fome dangerous pitch of animofity and revenge.

Our adventurer, finding himfelf baffled in his expectation of feeing her, inquired for the old gentleman, with whom he thought he had influence enough to make his apology good, in cafe he fhould find him prepoffeffed by the young lady's information. But here too he was difappointed, the uncle having gone to dine in the country, and his wife was indifpofed; fo that he had no pretext for ftaying in the houfe till the return of his charmer. Being, however, fruitful of expedients, he difmiffed his chariot, and took poffeffion of a room in a tavern, the windows of which fronted the merchant's gate; and there he propofed to watch until he fhould fee her approach. This fcheme he put in practice with indefatigable patience, though it was not attended with the expected fuccefs.

Emilia, whole caution was equally vigilant and commendable, forefeeing that fhe might be expoled to the fertility of his invention, came home by a private paffage, and entered by a postern, which was altogether unknown to her admirer; and her uncle did not arrive until it was fo late that he could not, with any decency, demand 2 conference.

Next morning, he did not fail to prefent himfelf at the door, and his miftrefs being denied by her own exprefs direction, infifted upon feeing the mafter of the houfe, who received him with fuch coldnefs of civility, as plainly gave him to underftand that he was acquainted with the difpleafure of his niece. He, therefore, with an air of candour, told the citizen, he could eafily perceive by his behaviour that he was the confidant of Mifs Emily, of whom he was come to afk pardon for the offence he had given; and did not doubt, if he could be admitted to her prefence, that he fhould be able to convince her that he had not erred intentionally, or at least propose fuch reparation as would effectually atone for his fault.

To this remonstrance the merchant, without any ceremony or circumlocution, answered, that though he was ignorant of the nature of his offence, he was very certain, that it must have been something very flagrant that could irritate his niece to such a degree, against a person for whom she had formerly a most particular regard. He owned, she had declared her intention to renounce his acquaintance for ever, and, doubtles, she had good reafon for so doing; neither would he undertake to promote an accommodation, unless he would give him full power to treat on the score of matrimony, which he supposed would be the only means of evincing his own sincerity, and obtaining Emilia's forgiveness.

Peregrine's pride was kindled by this blunt declaration, which he could not help confidering as the refult of a fcheme concerted betwixt the young lady and her uncle, in order to take the advantage of his heat. He therefore replied, with manifeft figns of difguft, that he did not apprehend there was any occasion for a mediator to reconcile the difference betwixt Emilia and him; and that all he defired was an opportunity of pleading in his own behalf.

The citizen frankly told him, that, as his niece had expressed an earnest defire of avoiding his company, he would not put the least constraint upon her inclination; and, in the mean time, gave him to know, that he was particularly engaged.

Our hero, glowing with indignation at this fupercilious treatment, "I was in the wrong (faid he) to look for good manners fo far on this fide of Temple-Bar: But you muft give me leave to tell you, Sir, that, unlefs I am favoured with an interview with Mifs Gauntlet, I fhalk conclude that you have actually laid a conftraint upon her inclination, for fome finifter purpofes of your own." "Sir (replied the old gentleman), you are welcome to make what conclusions fhall feem good unto your own imagination; but pray be fo good as to allow me the Vol. 11. E e privilege of being mafter in my own houfe." So faying, he very complaifantly flowed him to the door; and our lover being diffident of his own temper, as well as afraid of being uted with greater indignity, in a place where his perfonal prowefs would only ferve to heighten his difgrace, quitted the houfe in a transport of rage, which he could not wholly fupprefs, telling the landlord, that, if his age did not protect him, he would have chaftifed him for his infolent behaviour.

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

He projects a violent feheme, in confequence of which he is involved in a most fatiguing adventure, which greatly tends towards the augmentation of his chagrin.

Thus debarred of perfonal communication with his miftrefs, he effayed to retrieve her good graces by the most fubmiffive and pathetic letters, which he conveyed by divers artifices to her perufal; but, reaping no manner of benefit from these endeavours, his passion acquired a degree of impatience little inferior to downright frenzy; and he determined to run every rifk of life, fortune, and reputation, rather than defift from his unjuftifiable purfuit. Indeed, his refentment was now as deeply concerned as his love, and each of thefe paffions equally turbulent and loud in demanding gratification. He kept centinels continually in pay, to give him notice of her outgoings, in expectation of finding fome opportunity to carry her off; but her circumfpection entirely fruftrated this defign, for the fulpected every thing of that fort from a difpolition like his, and regulated her motions accordingly.

Baffled by her prudence and penetration, he altered his plan. On pretence of being called to his country houfe by fome affair of importance, he departed from London, and, taking lodgings at a farmer's houfe that flood near the road through which fhe muft have neceffarily paffed in her return to her mother, concealed himfelf from all intercourfe, except with his valet de chambre and Pipes, who had orders to fcour the country, and reconnoitre every horfe, coach, or carriage, that fhould appear on that highway, with a view of intercepting his Amanda in her paffage.

He had waited in this ambufcade a whole week, when his valet gave him notice, that he and his fellow-fcout had difcovered a chaife and fix, driving at full fpeed towards them; upon which they had flapped their hats over their cyes, fo as they might not be known, in cafe they fhould be feen, and concealed themfelves behind a hedge, from whence they could perceive in the carriage, as it paffed, a young man plainly dreffed, with a lady in a mafk, of the exact fize, fhape, and air of Emilia; and that Pipes followed them at a diftance, while he rode back to communicate this piece of intelligence.

Peregrine would fcarce allow him time to conclude his information. He ran down to the stable, where his horfe was kept ready faddled for the purpofe, and, never doubting that the lady in question was his mistrefs, attended by one of her uncle's clerks, mounted immediately, and rode full gallop after the chaife, which (when he had proceeded about two miles) he understood from Pipes, had put up at a neighbouring inn. Though his inclination prompted him to enter her apartment without farther delay, he fuffered himfelf to be diffuaded from taking fuch a precipitate step, by his privy counfellor, who obferved, that it would be impracticable to execute his purpofe of conveying her against her will from a public inn, that ftood in the midft of a populous village, which would infallibly rife in her defence. He advifed him therefore to lie in wait for the chaife, in fome remote and private part of the road, where they might accomplish their aim without difficulty or danger. In confequence of this admonition, our adventurer ordered Pipes to reconnoitre the inn, that fhe might not efcape another way, while he and the valet, in order to avoid being feen, took a circuit by an unfrequented path, and placed themfelves in ambufh, on a fpot which they chofe for the fcene of their achievement. Here they tarried a full hour, without feeing the carriage, or hearing from their centinel: So that the youth, unable to exert his patience one moment longer, left the foreigner in his flation, and rode back to his faithful lacquey, who affured him, that the travellers Eeij had not yet hove up their anchor, or proceeded on their voyage.

Notwithstanding this intimation, Pickle began to entertain fuch alarming fufpicions, that he could not refrain from advancing to the gate, and inquire for the company which had lately arrived in a chaife and fix. The innkeeper, who was not at all pleafed with the behaviour of those paffengers, did not think proper to observe the inftructions he had received; on the contrary, he plainly told him, that the chaife did not halt, but only entered at one door, and went out at the other, with a view to deceive those who purfued it, as he gueffed from the words of the gentleman, who had earneftly defired that his route might be concealed from any perfon who fhould inquire about their motions. " As for my own peart, measter (continued this charitable publican), I believes as how they are no better than they fhould be, elfe they wouldn't be in fuch a deadly fear of being overtaken. Methinks (faid I, when I faw them in fuch a woundy pother to be gone), oddfhheartlikins! this must be fome London 'prentice running away with his meafter's daughter, as fure as I'm a living foul. But, be he who he will, fartain it is, a has nothing of the gentleman about en; for, thof a afked fuch a favour, a never once put hand in pocket, or faid, " Dog, will you drink ?" Howfomever, that don't argufy in reverence of his being in a hurry; and a man may be fometimes a little too judgmatical in his conjectures." In all probability, this loquacious landlord would have ferved the traveller effectually, had Peregrine heard him to an end; but this impetuous youth, far from liftening to the fequel of his obfervations, interrupted him in the beginning of his career, by asking eagerly which road they followed; and, having received the inn-keeper's directions, clapped fpurs to his horfe, commanding Pipes to make the valet acquainted with his courfe, that they might attend him with all imaginable defpatch.

By the publican's account of their conduct, his former opinion was fully confirmed. He plied his fleed to the height of his mettle; and fo much was his imagination engroffed by the profpect of having Emilia in his power, that he did not perceive the road on which he travelled was quite different from that which led to the habitation of Mrs. Gauntlet. The valet de chambre was an utter ltranger to that part of the country; and, as for Mr. Pipes, fuch confiderations were altogether foreign to the economy of his reflection.

Ten long miles had our hero rode, when his eyes were bleffed with the fight of the chaife afcending an hill, at the diftance of a good league; upon which he doubled his diligence in fuch a manner, that he gained upon the carriage every minute, and at length approached io near to it, that he could difcern the lady and her conductor, with their heads thruft out at the windows, looking back, and fpeaking to the driver alternately, as if they earneftly befought him to augment the fpeed of his cattle.

Being thus, as it were, in fight of port, while he croffed the road, his horfe happened to plunge into a cart rut with fuch violence, that he was thrown feveral yards over his head; and the beaft's fhoulder being flipped by the fall, he found himfelf difabled from plucking the fruit, which was almost within his reach; for he had left his fervants at a confiderable distance behind him; and although they had been at his back, and fupplied him with another horfe, they were fo indifferently mounted, that he could not reasonably expect to overtake the flyers, who profited fo much by this difaster, that the chaife vanished in a moment.

It may be eafily conceived how a young man of his difpolition paffed his time, in this tantalizing fituation. He ejaculated with great fervency; but his prayers were not the effects of refignation. He ran back on foot, with incredible fpeed, in order to meet his valet, whom he unhorfed in a twinkling; and, taking his feat, began to exercife his whip and fpurs, after having ordered the Swifs to follow him on the other gelding, and committed the lame hunter to the care of Pipes.

Matters being adjufted in this manner, our adventurer profecuted the race with all his might; and, having made iome progrefs, was informed by a country man, that the chaife had ftruck off into another road, and, according to his judgment, was by that time about three miles a-head; though, in all probability, the horfes would not be able to hold out much longer, becaufe they feemed to E c iij be quite fpent when they paffed his door. Encouraged by this intimation, Peregrine pufhed on with great alacrity, though he could not regain fight of the defired objeft, till the clouds of night began to deepen, and even then he enjoyed nothing more than a transient glimpfe; for the carriage was no fooner feen, than fhrouded again from his view. Thefe vexatious circumftances animated his endeavours, while they irritated his chagrin : In fhort, he continued his purfuit till the night was far advanced, and himfelf fo uncertain about the object of his care, that he entered a folitary inn, with a view of obtaining fome intelligence, when, to his infinite joy, he perceived the chaife ftanding by itfelf, and the horfes panting in the yard. In full confidence of his having arrived at laft at the goal of all his withes, he alighted inftantaneoufly, and, running up to the coachman, with a piftol in his hand, commanded him, in an imperious tone, to conduct him to the lady's chamber, on pain of death. The driver, affrighted at this menacing addrefs, protefted, with great humility, that he did not know whither his fare had retired; for that he himfelf was paid and difmiffed from the fervice, becaufe he would not undertake to drive them all night crofs the country, without ftopping to refresh his horfes : But he promifed to go in quest of the waiter, who would fhow him to their apartment. He was accordingly detached on that errand, while our hero flood centinel at the gate, till the arrival of his valet de chambre, who joining him by accident, before the coachman returned, relieved him in his watch; and then the young gentleman, exafperated at his meffenger's delay, rushed, with fury in his eyes, from room to room, denouncing vengeance upon the whole family; but he did not meet with one living foul, until he entered the garret, where he found the landlord and his wife in bed. This chickenhearted couple, by the light of a rufh-candle that burned on the hearth, feeing a stranger burst into the chamber, in fuch a terrible attitude, were feized with confternation; and, exalting their voices, in a most lamentable strain, begged, for the passion of Christ, that he would fpare their lives, and take all they had.

Peregrine gueffing, from this exclamation, and the circumftance of their being a-bed, that they miftook him for a robber, and were ignorant of that which he wanted to know, difpelled their terror, by making them acquainted with the caufe of his vifit, and defired the hufband to get up with all poffible defpatch, in order to affift and attend him in his fearch.

Thus reinforced, he rummaged every corner of the inn, and, at last, finding the hostler in the stable, was by him informed (to his unfpeakable mortification), that the gentleman and lady who arrived in the chaife, had immediately hired post-horses for a certain village at the distance of fifteen miles, and departed without halting for the leaft refreshment. Our adventurer, mad with his disappointment, mounted his horfe in an inftant, and, with his attendant, took the fame road, with full determination to die, rather than defift from the profecution of his defign. He had, by this time, rode upwards of thirty miles fince three o'clock in the afternoon; fo that the horfes were almost quite jaded, and travelled this ftage fo flowly, that it was morning before they reached the place of their deftination, where, far from finding the fugitives, he underftood, that no fuch perfons as he defcribed had paffed that way, and that, in all likelihood, they had taken a quite contrary direction, while in order to miflead him in his purfuit, they had amufed the hoftler with a falfe route. This conjecture was ftrengthened by his perceiving (now for the first time) that he had deviated a confiderable way from the road, through which they must have journeyed, in order to arrive at the place of her mother's refidence; and these fuggestions utterly deprived him of the small remains of recollection which he had hitherto retained. His eyes rolled about, witneffing rage and diffraction; he foamed at the mouth, ftamped upon the ground with great violence, uttered incoherent imprecations against himfelf and all mankind, and would have fallied forth again, he knew not whither, upon the fame horfe, which he had already almost killed with fatigue, had not his confidant found means to quiet the tumult of his thoughts, and recal his reflection, by reprefenting the condition of the poor animals, and advising him to hire fresh horfes, and ride post across the country, to the village in the neighbourhood of Mrs. Gauntlet's habitation, where they E e iiii fhould infallibly intercept the daughter, provided they could get the flart of her upon the road.

Peregrine not only relified, but forthwith acted in conformity with this good counfel. His own horfes were committed to the charge of the landlord, with directions for Pipes, in cafe he flould come in queft of his mafter; and a couple of flout geldings being prepared, he and his valet took the road again, fteering their courfe according to the motions of the poft-boy, who undertook to be their guide. They had almost finished the first ftage, when they deferied a poft-chaife just halting at the inn where they proposed to change horfes; upon which our adventurer, glowing with a most interesting prefage, put his beaft to the full speed, and approached near enough to diftinguish (as the travellers quitted the carriage) that he had at last come up with the very individual perfons whom he had purfued fo long.

Flushed with this discovery, he galloped into the yard fo fuddenly, that the lady and her conductor fcarce had time to fhut themfelves up in a chamber, to which they retreated with great precipitation; fo that the purfuer was now certain of having houfed his prey. That he might, however, leave nothing to fortune, he placed himfelf upon the ftair by which they had afcended to the apartment, and fent up his compliments to the young lady, defiring the favour of being admitted to her prefence, otherwife he fhould be obliged to wave all ceremony, and take that liberty which the would not give. The fervant, having conveyed his meffage through the key-hole, returned with an answer, importing that she would adhere to the refolution fhe had taken, and perifh, rather than comply with his will. Our adventurer, without flaying to make any rejoinder to this reply, ran up ftairs, and, thundering at the door for entrance, was given to understand by the nymph's attendant, that a blunderbufs was ready primed for his reception, and that he would do well to fpare him the neceffity of fhedding blood in defence of a perfon who had put herfelf under his protection. " All the laws of the land (faid he) cannot now untie the knots by which we are bound together; and therefore I will guard her as my own property; fo that you had better defilt from your fruitlefs attempt, and thereby confult your own fafety; for, by the God that made me ! I will discharge my piece upon you, as foon as you fet your nofe within the doorand your blood be upon your own head." Thefe menaces, from a citizen's clerk, would have been fufficient motives for Pickle to ftorm the breach, although they had not been reinforced by that declaration, which informed him of Emilia's having bestowed herself in marriage upon such a contemptible rival. This fole confideration added wings to his impetuofity, and he applied his foot to the door with fuch irrefiftible force, as burfted it open in an inftant, entering at the fame time with a piftol ready cocked in his hand. His antagonist, instead of firing his blunderbufs, when he faw him approach, ftarted back with evident figns of furprife and confternation, exclaiming, "Lord Jefus ! Sir, you are not the man ! and, without doubt, are under fome miftake with regard to us."

Before Peregrine had time to answer this falutation, the lady, hearing it, advanced to him, and pulling off a mafk, discovered a face which he had never seen before. The Gorgon's head, according to the fables of antiquity, never had a more inftantaneous or petrifying effect, than that which this countenance produced upon the aftonifhed youth. His eyes were fixed upon this unknown object, as if they had been attracted by the power of enchantment, his feet feemed rivetted to the ground, and, after having flood motionless for the space of a few minutes, he dropped down in an apoplexy of difappointment and defpair. The Swifs, who had followed him, feeing his master in this condition, lifted him up, and, laying him upon a bed in the next room, let him blood immediately, without hefitation, being always provided with a cafe of lancets, against all accidents on the road. To this forefight our hero, in all probability, was indebted for his life. By virtue of a very copious evacuation, he recovered the use of his senses; but the complication of fatigues and violent transports, which he had undergone, brewed up a dangerous fever in his blood; and a phyfician being called from the next market-town, feveral days elapfed before he would anfwer for his life.

CHAPTER LXXIX.

Peregrine fends a molfage to Mrs. Gauntlet, who rejects his proposal. He repairs to the garrifon.

At length, however, his conflitution overcame his difeafe, though not before it had in a great meafure tamed the fury of his difpolition, and brought him to'a ferious confideration of his conduct. In this humiliation of his fpirits, he reflected with fhame and remorfe upon his treachery to the fair, the innocent Emilia; he remembered his former fentiments in her favour, as well as the injunctions of his dying uncle; he recollected his intimacy with her brother, against which he had fo bafely finned; and, revolving all the circumstances of her conduct, found it fo commendable, fpirited, and noble, that he deemed her an object of fufficient dignity to merit his honourable addreffes, even though his duty had not been concerned in the decifion : But, obligated as he was to make reparation to a worthy family, which he had fo grofsly injured, he thought he could not manifest his reformation too foon; and, whenever he found himfelf able to hold the pen, wrote a letter to Mrs. Gauntlet, wherein he acknowledged, with many expressions of forrow and contrition, that he had acted a part altogether unbecoming a man of honour, and should never enjoy the least tranquillity of mind, until he fhould have merited her forgivenefs. protefted, that, although his happiness entirely depended upon the determination of Emilia, he would even renounce all hope of being bleffed with her favour, if the could point out any other method of making reparation to that amiable young lady, but by laying his heart and fortune at her feet, and submitting himself to her pleafure during the remaining part of his life. He conjured her, therefore, in the most pathetic manner, to pardon him, in confideration of his fincere repentance, and to ufe her maternal influence with her daughter, fo as that he might be permitted to wait upon her with a weddingring, as foon as his health would allow him to undertake the journey.

This explanation being defpatched by Pipes, who had, by this time, found his mafter, the young gentleman inquired about the couple whom he had fo unfortunately purfued, and underftood from his valet de chambre, who learned the ftory from their own mouths, that the lady was the only daughter of a rich Jew, and her attendant no other than his apprentice, who had converted her to Chriftianity, and married her at the fame time; that this fecret having taken air, the old Ifraelite had contrived a fcheme to feparate them for ever ; and they being apprized of his intention, had found means to elope from his houfe, with a view of sheltering themselves in France, until the affair could be made up; that, feeing three men ride after them with fuch eagerness and speed, they never doubted that the purfuers were her father, and fome friends or domeftics, and on that fuppolition had fled with the utmost defpatch and trepidation, until they had found themfelves happily undeceived, at that very inftant when they expected nothing but mifchief and misfortune. Laftly, The Swifs gave him to understand, that, after having profeffed fome concern for his deplorable fituation, and enjoyed a flight refreshment, they had taken their departure for Dover, and, in all likelihood, were fafely arrived at Paris.

In four and twenty hours after Pipes was charged with his commiffion, he brought back an answer from the mother of Emilia, couched in these words :---

" SIR,

" I RECEIVED the favour of yours, and am glad, for your own fake, that you have attained a due fenfe and conviction of your unkind and unchriftian behaviour to poor Emy. I thank God, none of my children were ever fo infulted before. Give me leave to tell you, Sir, my daughter was no upftart, without friends or education, but a young lady, as well bred, and better born, than most private gentlewomen in the kingdom; and therefore, though you had no efteem for her perfon, you ought to have paid fome regard to her family, which (no difparagement to you, Sir) is more honourable than your own. As for your propofal, Mifs Gauntlet will not hear of it, being that the thinks her honour will not allow her to liften to any terms of reconciliation; and the is not yet fo defitute, as to embrace an offer to which fhe has the leaft objection. In the mean time, fhe is fo much indifpofed, that fhe cannot poffibly fee company; fo I beg you will not take the trouble of making a fruitlefs journey to this place. Perhaps your future conduct may deferve her forgivenefs; and really, as I am concerned for your happinefs (which you affure me depends upon her condefcention), I with with all my heart it may; and am (notwithftanding all that has happened)

Your fincere well-wifher,

CECILIA GAUNTLET."

From this epiftle, and the information of his meffenger, our hero learned, that his miftrefs had actually profited by his wild-goofe chafe, fo as to make a fafe retreat to her mother's houfe. Though forry to hear of her indifpolition, he was alfo piqued at her implacability, as well as at fome ftately paragraphs of the letter, in which (he thought) the good lady had confulted her own vanity, rather than her good fenfe. Thefe motives of refentment helped him to bear his difappointment like a philofopher, effecially as he had now quieted his confcience, in proffering to redrefs the injury he had done; and, moreover, found himfelf, with regard to his love, in a calm ftate of hope and refignation.

A feafonable fit of illnefs is an excellent medicine for the turbulence of paffion. Such a reformation had the fever produced in the economy of his thoughts, that he moralized like an apoftle, and projected feveral prudential fehemes for his future conduct.

In the mean time, as foon as his health was fufficiently re-eftablifhed, he took a trip to the garrifon, in order to vifit his friends; and learned from Hatchway's own mouth, that he had broke the ice of courtfhip to his aunt, and that his addreffes were now fairly afloat; though, when he firft declared himfelf to the widow, after the had been duly prepared for the occafion, by her niece and the reft of her friends, fhe had received his propofal with a becoming referve, and pioufly wept at the remembrance of her hufband, obferving, that the fhould never meet with his fellow.

Peregrine promoted the lieutenant's fuit with all his influence; and all Mrs. Trunnion's objections to the match being furmounted, it was determined, that the day of marriage fhould be put off for three months, that her reputation might not fuffer by a precipitate engagement. His next care was to give orders for erecting a plain marble monument to the memory of his uncle, on which the following infcription, composed by the bridegroom, actually appeared in golden letters.

> Here lies, Foundered in a fathom and half, The fhell Of HAWSER TRUNNION, Efq. Formerly commander of a fquadron In his Majefty's fervice, Who broach'd to, at five P. M. Oct. X. In the year of his age Threefcore and nineteen. He kept his guns always loaded,

And his tackle ready mann'd, And never fhowed his poop to the enemy, Except when he took her in tow; But, His fhot being expended, His match burnt out, And his upper works decayed, He was funk By Death's fuperior weight of metal. Neverthelefs, He will be weighed again At the Great Day, His rigging refitted, And his timbers repaired, And, with one broadfide, Make his adverfary Strike in his turn.

CHAPTER LXXX.

He returns to London, and meets with Cadwallader, who entertains him with many curious particulars. Crabtree founds the duchefs, and undeceives Pickle, who, by an extraordinary accident, becomes acquainted with another lady of quality.

THE young gentleman having performed thefe laft offices in honour of his deceafed benefactor, and prefented Mr. Jolter to the long-expected living, which at this time happened to be vacant, returned to London, and refumed his former gaiety—not that he was able to fhake Emilia from his thought, or even to remember her without violent emotions; for, as he recovered his vigour, his former impatience recurred, and therefore he refolved to plunge himfelf headlong into fome intrigue, that might engage his paffions and amufe his imagination.

A man of his accomplishments could not fail to meet with a variety of fubjects on which his gallantry would have been properly exercifed; and this abundance diftracted his choice, which at any time was apt to be influenced by caprice and whim. I have already obferved, that he had lifted his view, through a matrimonial perfpective, as high as a lady of the first quality and diffinction; and, now that he was refufed by Mils Gauntlet, and enjoyed a little refpite from the agonies of that flame which her charms had kindled in his heart, he renewed his affiduities to her grace. Though he durft not yet rifk an explanation, he enjoyed the pleafure of feeing himfelf fo well received in quality of a particular acquaintance, that he flattered himfelf with the belief of his having made fome progrefs in her heart; and was confirmed in this conceited notion by the affurances of her woman, whom, by liberal largefles, he retained in his intereft, becaufe the found means to perfuade him that the was in the confidence of her lady. But, notwithstanding this encouragement, and the fanguine fuggestions of his own vanity, he dreaded the thoughts of exposing himfelf to her ridicule and refentment by a premature declaration, and determined to postpone his addresses, until he should be more certified of the probability of fucceeding in his attempt.

While he remained in this hefitation and fufpenfe, he was one morning very agreeably furprifed with the appearance of his friend Crabtree, who, by the permiflion of Pipes, to whom he was well known, entered his chamber before he was awake, and, by a violent fhake of the fhoulder, difengaged him from the arms of fleep. The first compliments having mutually passed. Cadwallader gave him to understand, that he had arrived in town over night in the stage-coach from Bath, and entertained him with fuch a ludicrous account of his fellow-travellers, that Peregrine, for the first time fince their parting, indulged himself in mirth, even to the hazard of fuffocation.

Crabtree, having rehearfed thefe adventures, in fuch a peculiarity of manner as added infinite ridicule to every circumftance, and repeated every fcandalous report which had circulated at Bath, after Peregrine's departure, was informed by the youth, that he harboured a defign upon the perfon of fuch a duchefs, and in all appearance had no reafon to complain of his reception; but that he would not venture to declare himfelf, until he fhould be more afcertained of her fentiments: And therefore he begged leave to depend upon the intelligence of his friend Cadwallader, who, he knew, was admitted to her parties.

The mifanthrope, before he would promife his affiftance, afked if his profpect verged towards matrimony? and our adventurer (who gueffed the meaning of his queftion) replying in the negative, he undertook the office of reconnoitering her inclination, protesting at the fame time, that he would never concern himfelf in any fcheme that did not tend to the difgrace and deception of all the fex. On these conditions he espoused the interest of our hero; and a plan was immediately concerted, in confequence of which they met by accident at her grace's table. Pickle having staid all the fore-part of the evening, and fat out all the company, except the mifanthrope and a certain widow lady, who was faid to be in the fecrets of my lady duchefs, went away on pretence of an indifpenfable engagement, that Crabtree might have a proper opportunity of making him the fubject of conversation.

Accordingly, he had fcarce quitted the apartment, when this cynic, attending him to the door with a look of morofe difdain, "Were I an abfolute prince (faid he), and that fellow one of my fubjects, I would order him to be clothed in fackcloth, and he fhould drive my affes to water, that his lofty fpirit might be lowered to the level of his deferts. The pride of a peacock is downright felfdenial, when compared with the vanity of that coxcomb, which was naturally arrogant, but is now rendered altogether intolerable, by the reputation he acquired at Bath, for kicking a bully, outwitting a club of raw fharpers, and divers other pranks, in the execution of which he was more lucky than wife. But nothing has contributed fo much to the increase of his infolence and felf-conceit, as the favour he found among the ladies. Ay, the ladies, madam, I care not who knows it-the ladies, who (to their honour be it fpoken) never fail to patronize foppery and folly, provided they folicit their encouragement. And yet this dog was not on the footing of those hermaphroditical animals, who may be reckoned among the number of waiting-women, who air your fhifts, comb your lapdogs, examine your nofes with magnifying glaffes, in order to fqueeze out the worms, clean your teeth-brufhes, fweeten your handkerchiefs, and foften wafte paper for your occasions. This fellow Pickle was entertained for more important purpofes; his turn of duty never came till all those lapwings were gone to rooft; then he fcaled windows, leaped over garden walls, and was let in by Mrs. Betty in the dark. Nay, the magistrates of Bath complimented him with the freedom of the corporation, merely becaufe, through his means, the waters had gained extraordinary credit; for every female of a tolerable appearance, that went thither on account of her fterility, got the better of her complaint, during his refidence at Bath : And now the fellow thinks no woman can withftand his addreffes. He had not been here three minutes, when I could perceive, with half an eye, that he had marked out your grace for a conquest-I mean in an honourable way; though the rafcal has impudence enough to attempt any thing." So faying, he fixed his eyes upon the duchefs, who (while her face glowed with indignation), turning to her confidant, expressed herfelf in these words: "Upon my life! I believe there is actually fome truth in what this old ruffian fays; I have myfelf obferved that young fellow eying me with a very particular stare." "It is not to be at all wondered at (faid her friend), that a youth of his complexion fhould be fenfible to the charms of your grace ! but I dare fay he would not prefume to entertain any but the most honourable and refpectful fentiments." "Refpectful fentiments ! (cried my lady, with a look of ineffable difdain), if I thought the fellow had affurance enough to think of me in any fhape, I proteft I would forbid him my houfe. Upon my honour, fuch inftances of audacity fhould induce perfons of quality to keep your fmall gentry at a greater diftance; for they are very apt to grow impudent, upon the leaft countenance or encouragement."

Cadwallader, fatisfied with this declaration, changed the fubject of difcourfe, and next day communicated his difcovery to his friend Pickle, who upon this occasion felt the most stinging fenfations of mortified pride, and refolved to quit his profpect with a good grace. Nor did the execution of this felf-denying fcheme cost him one moment's uneafinefs; for his heart had never been interefted in the purfuit, and his vanity triumphed in the thoughts of manifesting his indifference. Accordingly, the very next time he visited her grace, his behaviour was remarkably frank, fprightly, and difengaged ; and the fubject of love being artfully introduced by the widow, who had been directed to found his inclinations, he rallied the paffion with great eafe and feverity, and made no fcruple of declaring himfelf heart-whole.

Though the duchefs had refented his fuppofed affection, the was now offended at his infentibility, and even fignified her difgust, by observing, that perhaps his attention to his own qualifications fcreened him from the impreffion of all other objects.

While he enjoyed this farcafm, the meaning of which he could plainly difcern, the company was joined by a certain virtuofo, who had gained free accels to all the great families of the land, by his notable talent of goffiping and buffoonery. He was now in the feventy-fifth year of his age; his birth was fo obfcure; that he fcarce knew his father's name; his education fuitable to the dignity of his defcent; his character publicly branded with homicide, profligacy, and breach of truft; yet this man, by the happy inheritance of impregnable effrontery, and a lucky profitution of all principle in rendering himfelf fublervient to the appetites of the great, had attained to an independency of fortune, as well as to fuch a particular fhare of favour among the quality, that, although he was well known to have pimped for three generations of the nobility, there was not a lady of fashion in the kingdom who ferupled to admit him to her toilette, or even to be fquired by him in any place of public entertainment. Not but that this fage was occasionally ufeful to his fellow-creatures, by these connexions with people of fortune; for he often undertook to folicit charity in behalf of diftress objects, with a view of embezzling one half of the benefactions. It was an errand of this kind that now brought him to the house of her grace.

After having fat a few minutes, he told the company that he would favour them with a very proper opportunity to extend their benevolence, for the relief of a poor gentlewoman, who was reduced to the most abject mifery, by the death of her husband, and just delivered of a couple of fine boys. They, moreover, understood from his information, that this object was daughter of a good family, who had renounced her in confequence of her marrying an enfign without a fortune; and even obstructed his promotion with all their influence and power; a circumstance of barbarity which had made fuch an impression upon his mind, as difordeded his brain, and drove him to defpair, in a fit of which he had made away with himself, leaving his wife, then big with child, to all the horrors of indigence and grief.

Various were the criticifms on this pathetic picture, which the old man drew with great expression. My lady duchefs concluded, that the mult be a creature void of all feeling and reflection, who could furvive fuch aggravated milery; therefore, did not deferve to be relieved, except in the character of a common beggar; and was generous enough to offer a recommendation, by which the would be admitted into an infirmary, to which her grace was a fubferiber; at the fame time advising the folicitor to fend the twins to the Foundling Hofpital, where they would be carefully nurfed and brought up, fo as to become ufeful members to the commonwealth. Another lady, with all due deference to the opinion of the duchefs, was free enough to blame the generofity of her grace, which would only ferve to encourage children in difobedience to their parents, and might be the means not only of prolonging the diffrefs of the wretched creature, but alfo of ruining the conflitution of fome young heir, perhaps the hope of a great family! for fhe did fuppofe that madam, when her month fhould be up, and her brats difposed of, would foread her attractions to the public (provided fhe could profit by her perfon), and, in the ufual way, make a regular progrefs from St. James's to Drury Lane. She apprehended, for these reasons, that their compassion would be most effectually shown, in leaving her to perish in her prefent neceffity; and that the old gentleman would be unpardonable, fhould he perfift in his endeavours to relieve her. A third member of this tender-hearted fociety, after having afked if the young woman was handfome, and being answered in the negative, allowed that there was a great deal of reafon in what had been faid by the honourable perfon who had fpoke laft; neverthelefs, fhe humbly conceived her fentence would admit of fome mi-"Let the bantlings (faid the) be fent to the hoftigation. pital, according to the advice of her grace, and a fmall collection be made for the prefent fupport of the mother; and, when her health is recovered, I will take her into my family, in quality of an upper fervant, or medium between me and my woman; for, upon my life! I can't endure to chide or give directions to a creature, who is, in point of birth and education, but one degree above the vulgar."

This propofal met with univerfal approbation. The duchefs (to her immortal honour) began the contribution with a crown; fo that the reft of the company were obliged to reftrict their liberality to half the fum, that her grace might not be affronted: And the propofer demanding the poor woman's name and place of abode, the old mediator could not help giving her ladyfhip a verbal direction, though he was extremely mortified (on more accounts than one) to find fuch an iffue to his folicitation.

Peregrine, who, "though humourous as winter, had a tear for pity, and an hand open as day for melting charity," was thocked at the nature and refult of this ungenerous confultation. He contributed his half-crown, however; and, retiring from the company, betook himfelf to the lodgings of the forlorn lady in the ftraw, according to the direction he had heard. Upon inquiry, he underftood, that fhe was then visited by fome charitable gentlewoman, who had fent for a nurfe, and waited the return of the meffenger; and he fent up his respects, desiring he might be permitted to see her, on pretence of having been intimate with her late husband.

Though the poor woman had never heard of his name, fhe did not think proper to deny his requeft; and he was conducted to a paltry chamber in the third ftory, where he found this unhappy widow fitting upon a truckle-bed, and fuckling one of her infants, with the most piteous expreffion of anguith in her features, which were naturally regular and fweet, while the other was fondled on the knee of a perfon, whofe attention was fo much engroffed by her little charge, that for the prefent fhe could mind nothing elfe : And it was not till after the first compliments paffed betwixt the haplefs mother and our adventurer, that he perceived the ftranger's countenance, which infpired him with the higheft efteem and admiration. He beheld all the graces of elegance and beauty, breathing fentiment and beneficence, and foftened into the most enchanting tendernefs of weeping fympathy. When he declared the caufe of his vifit, which was no other than the defire of befriending the diftreffed lady, to whom he prefented a bank-note for twenty pounds, he was favoured with fuch a look of complacency by this amiable phantom, who might have been justly taken for an angel ministering to the necessities of mortals, that his whole foul was transported with love and veneration. Nor was this prepoffeffion diminished by the information of the widow, who, after having manifested her gratitude in a flood of tears, told him, that the unknown object of his efteem was a perfon of honour, who having heard by accident of her deplorable fituation, had immediately obeyed the dictates of her humanity, and come in perfon to relieve her diffrefs; that fhe had not only generoufly fupplied her with money for prefent fustenance, but allo undertaken to provide a nurfe for her babes, and even promifed to fayour her with protection, should she furvive her prefent melancholy fituation. To thefe articles of intelligence the added, that the name of her benefactrefs was the celebrated Lady ______, to whofe character the youth was no ftranger, though he had never feen her perfon before. The killing edge of her charms was a little blunted by the accidents of time and fortune; but no man of tafte and imagination, whofe nerves were not quite chilled with the froft of age, could, even at that time, look upon her with impunity. And as Peregrine faw her attractions heightened by the tender office in which fhe was engaged, he was fmitten with her beauty, and fo ravifhed with her compaffion, that he could not fupprefs his emotions, but applauded her benevolence with all the warmth of enthufiafm.

Her ladyfhip received his compliments with great politenefs and affability. And the occafion on which they met being equally interefting to both, an acquaintance commenced between them, and they concerted meafures for the benefit of the widow and her two children, one of whom our hero befpoke for his own godfon; for Pickle was not fo obfcure in the beau monde, but that his fame had reached the ears of this lady, who, therefore, did not difcourage his advances towards her friendfhip and efteem.

All the particulars relating to their charge being adjufted, he attended her ladyfhip to her own houfe; and, by her converfation, had the pleafure of finding her underftanding fuitable to her other accomplifhments. Nor had fhe any reafon to think that our hero's qualifications had been exaggerated by common report.

One of their adopted children died before it was baptized; fo that their care concentred in the other, for whom they ftood fponfors. Underftanding that the old agent was become troublefome in his vifits to the mother, to whom he now began to adminifter fuch counfel as fhocked the delicacy of her virtue, they removed her into another lodging, where fhe would not be expofed to his machinations. In lefs than a month, our hero learned from a nobleman of his acquaintance, that the hoary pander had actually engaged to procure for him this poor afflicted gentlewoman; and being fruftrated in his intention, fubfituted in her room a nymph from the purlieus of Covent Garden, that made his lordfhip fmart feverely for the favours fhe beftowed. Meanwhile, Peregrine cultivated his new acquaintance with all his art and affiduity, prefuming from the circumftances of her reputation and fate, as well as on the ftrength of his own merit, that, in time, he should be able to indulge that passion which had begun to glow within his breast.

As her ladyfhip had undergone a vaft variety of fortune and adventure, which he had heard indiffinctly related, with numberlefs errors and mifreprefentations, he was no fooner entitled, by the familiarity of communication, to afk fuch a favour, than he earneftly entreated her to entertain him with the particulars of her ftory; and, by dint of importunity, fhe was at length prevailed upon (in a felect party) to gratify his curiofity, by the account given in the following volume.
